TAFT, CRIPPLED AT GOLF, LAID UP AT HOME OF HALE

Sounds a New Note on Conservation in New England in Ellsworth Speech, and Praises the Famous Sons of Maine

ELLSWORTH, Me., July 23.—In a broad easy chair on the veranda of Senator Hale's country place near here, President Taft is to-night resting his right ankle, which he severely twisted on the Kebo links at Bar Harbor, yesterday.

It is possible that President Taft may have to remain over here to-morrow to allow the swelling in his ankle to be reduced, or at least to remain aboard the Mayflower for the remainder of the trip.

So painful has the injury become that the President was able to walk only with great difficulty to-day at Bangor, where he spent an hour earlier in the day. His face twitched with pain several times, and when he alighted from the automobile at the station in Bangor to board the special back to Ellsworth, he was compelled to lean for support on the shoulder of "Jimmy" Sloan, the secret service guard.

The President twisted his ankle on a hill which is a terror to all who play on the Kebo links. He had been warned of it, and when he went out wore spike shoes. The first day he got over it nicely, but yesterday his foot slipped into a pool of soft earth and his foot gave way beneath him.

Put Compresses on Ankle.

Speaking of it to-day, the President said he thought nothing of it at the time, but the effect of standing on his feet yesterday to make the speech on the village green was too much for him, and when he awoke this morning he was scarcely able to stand. The ship surgeon on the Mayflower put compresses on the ankles and the President hopes that with a day's rest he will be able to get about all right.

He spoke briefly to a crowd in Hancock Hall here this afternoon, and then returned to Senator Hale's where he and his party will be entertained until to-morrow, when they plan to resume their cruise.

There was a big crowd at Bangor to see the President. Governor Fernald and a party of Maine officials met the party at the ferry.

A short stop was made at Ellsworth to permit the ladies of the party to alight. Waiting autos carried them to the Hale place. Bangor was reached at noon. President Taft's address was of a non-political character. He referred to the famous men Maine has given to the nation. Hannibal Hamlin, Chief Justice Fuller, Boutwell, Reed and Dingley and he paid tribute to the present Senators, Hale and Frye.

The President gave a new twist to the conservation movement by advising New Englanders to adopt scientific methods of agriculture and reclaim the abandoned farms to the section of the country.

In his Ellsworth address the President again paid a tribute to Senator Hale, whose long services he referred to, as well as to the fact that the President's father and Senator were old friends. Mr. Taft added that he did not mean, however, to imply that the Senator was an old man, at which Mr Hale vigorously nodded his assent.

Refers to Criticisms.

The President also intervened in the Ellsworth speech to the criticism to which he has been subjected. He said that he supposed there was a natural desire on the part of the people to see the man "whom chance has made the temporary head of the nation, and who has been subjected to so much abuse, and after all apparently thriving on it."

Despite his lame foot, the President also shook hands with a thousand people before he was ushered off to Senator Hale's house for the night.

CRIPPEN AND GIRL ON SARDINIAN, TO BE SEIZED AT MONTREAL

Dentist Hunted as Slayer of His Wife on Board Liner Due Next Saturday; Typist Disguised as Son, Captain Wires

Scotland Yard Positive That Man Posing as a Minister Is Fugitive—Pair Not Aware They Are Under Surveillance

LONDON, July 23.—Dr. H. H. Crippen, wanted for the murder of his wife, Belle Elmore, together with his typist, Miss Ethel Clare Leneve, will be arrested in Montreal next Saturday, when the Allan line steamship Sardinian dips up to her pier, according to a statement given out to-night by Scotland Yard officials.

The pair are still unaware that they are under surveillance.

The man alleged to be Crippen is registered under the name of "Rev. Robinson," and the supposed Miss Leneve, disguised as a boy, is travelling as his son.

Scotland Yard declares there is no doubt as to the identity of the couple. Wireless messages have been received from the captain of the Sardinian notifying the police that he will not let the couple know they have been discovered until they walk down the gangplank into the arms of the waiting Canadian detectives.

Inspector Hurries to Montreal.

This information from the Sardinian accounts for the hurried departure of Inspector Dew of Scotland Yard for America on the Cunard liner Caronia, which sailed to-day for New York.

The Sardinian left Havre, France, on Monday, July 18, and is due in Montreal on the 30th.

The wireless apparatus on the Sardinian went out of commission late this afternoon, according to the police officials, and it is impossible to get into further communication with her officers.

The last messages received, however, stated that while the pair was being kept under close surveillance, they were not warned in any way that they were suspected, but were allowed to mingle with the other passengers and have perfect freedom until the liner should reach Montreal.

Inspector Dew can hardly reach Montreal before the Sardinian, but the Canadian police have been cabled a complete and accurate description of the pair so there may be no doubt of their identity if they are really on the vessel.

Sailed From France.

The police authorities here are practically resting in their efforts to apprehend the pair, so confident are they that the murderer and Miss Leneve are fleeing toward Canada.

Every clew in the possession of the police led to France and to the country in which Crippen and Miss Leneve first sought refuge. The fact, therefore, that the couple under suspicion sailed from France has strengthened the confidence of the police in the information sent by the Sardinian's captain.

According to his wireless messages the deck steward noticed the peculiar actions of "Rev. Robinson" and his "son" as soon as they boarded the vessel. He first saw that "Rev. Robinson" wore a heavy set of eye brows which seemed false. He scrutinized the couple carefully and then notified the captain, who also looked them over without attracting their attention. The other officers of the ship, after observing "Rev. Robinson" and his son, agreed that they filled the description of Crippen and Miss Leneve in every particular.

CARDINAL GIBBONS reached yesterday the seventy-sixth milestone of his life. Archbishop O'Connell paid the following tribute to the venerable head of the Catholic church in America:

"A thorough American in thought and sentiment; patriotic to the core; devoted to the welfare of the nation in its highest sense; a true Christian gentleman, simple in manner, humble of heart, amiable of disposition, irreproachable in conduct—such a citizen, such a prelate is the man whom Rome has honored with its highest dignity.

"All Americans honor with genuine esteem James Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore and citizen of the United States."

Above is printed a fac-simile of the message received by the Boston American from Cardinal Gibbons. The message reads as follows:

I cordially thank you for your words and congratulations. I thank God for the growth of religion and good citizenship during the last half century.

Many Greetings For Cardinal On His Birthday

BALTIMORE, July 23.—Cardinal Gibbons was happy to-day as congratulations on his seventy-sixth birthday came hour after hour by mail and telegram from friends all over America and Europe.

The messages of felicitation were by no means confined to his fellow-Catholics. Leading Protestants joined in the great chorus of good wishes which came to his desk. The opening of each message and its quick perusal caused a smile of gratitude to beam upon the benignant face of America's only Cardinal as he took up each telegram or letter in its turn, and his eye read the tender and loving words of some distant friend.

Though seventy-six years old, Cardinal Gibbons is as energetic and active and as capable of fatigue as he was twenty years ago. As he walks through the city streets and tramps out into the suburban districts, with one of the diocesan clergy for his companion, he covers the ground with a regular Weston stride, chatting all the way with the enthusiasm of a schoolboy talking about a ball game. He is a great reader, and the evening hours are spent in his study, when he is not engaged at devotions in the adjacent Cathedral.

As he heads on the road of life toward four score years and ten years more, as his legions of friends devoutly hope, the American Cardinal is a striking instance of fine defying energy of both mind and body.

FOSS BY OVER 15,000, M'DONALD ASSERTS

Executive Chairman Says Democrats Will Surely Win With Congressman as Nominee.

A general poll of the voters, covering a considerable section of Massachusetts, says Chairman John F. McDonald of the executive board of the State Committee, indicates Democratic success in Massachusetts this Fall by from 15,000 to 30,000 plurality.

"There isn't any question about it," says Chairman McDonald, "mark the figures, in full, and see if they are not substantiated in November."

"Who'll be the candidate?" McDonald was asked.

"Foss," he said. "These figures are predicated on the nomination of Eugene N. Foss."

McDonald was one of the managers of last Fall's Valley-and-Foss campaign. When that was over he managed the mayoralty campaign of John F. Fitzgerald.

Nothing Doing at Sagamore Hill.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., July 23.—This day was unique for Sagamore Hill. Colonel Roosevelt saw no visitors, felled no trees, pitched no hay, neither swam nor boated, nor rode, and so far as can be learned said nothing. Even reporters were barred. The colonel remained in absolute seclusion during the entire day. There was nothing doing.

Splash! Overboard Is Dumped O'Meara's Boom for Congress!

Twelve Men with Masks Push It Off the Police Boat "Boston Common" at Nix's Mate.

The police boat "Boston Common" put in at midnight last night to Driscoll's landing at the foot of State street. Twelve masked men slowly let down to her a gunnysack filled with some soft material.

Each of the twelve, it was noticed, wore a long, loose-fitting coat. Their hats were soft out tall.

When all were aboard the "Boston Common" tossed her way down the harbor and out to a point off Nix's Mate. Here, with solemn ceremony, the crew dumped overboard the gunnysack, containing the O'Meara congressional boom.

For the purposes of this brief chronicle, the wind moaned like a lost soul last night and the rain fell pitilessly. It was a hard night at sea, Captain!

RAILROAD FARES GO UP.

Yesterday's Increase for Long-Distance Riders Only.

Long-distance tickets cost more yesterday on the New Haven road than they have for many years, the advertised increase in fares published one month ago going into effect. The cost of suburban tickets has not been affected and local officials denied that an increased fare was to be required on the child-rail road to Nantasket. The officials of the Nantasket Beach Steamboat Company also denied that the passage to and from Nantasket was to be raised from

BOSTON WOMEN ASK GOVERNOR DRAPER TO REMOVE O'MEARA

Women's Board of Trade, Resenting Commissioner's Sneering Recommendation That Women in Crossing Cannot Keep to Well-Lighted Paths, Passes Resolutions Requesting His Dismissal.

Mayor Fitzgerald Explains, in a Statement Written Expressly for the American, His Reasons for Calling for Police Protection—Mrs. Conboy's Amazing Story of Night Visit to the Common.

THE protest against the attitude of Police Co... O'Meara in refusing to give adequate police protection to the decent people of Boston, and particularly the women, who want to enjoy the fresh air of the Common, reached a climax of fervid interest yesterday when men and women of all classes came out in an emphatic demand that the Common be cleaned up at once and kept clean.

Clergymen, professional men, business men and trades women, who represent much of the commercial welfare of Boston joined in the movement with a fervor and unity that never before characterized a similar agitation in this city.

One of the most startling developments of the day was the sober declaration of one working woman who has been subjected to insult in the Common again and again that she would purchase a revolver at once and would shoot the first man who offered her affront.

BUSINESS WOMEN DEMAND REMOVAL.

At a meeting held under the auspices of the Women's Board of Trade, at No. 420 Boylston street, and attended by nearly 100 women, all of whom are in business and employers of girls, resolutions were adopted demanding that Governor Draper remove Police Commissioner O'Meara if he does not give adequate police protection on the Common.

The Woman's Homestead Association, which was represented at the Woman's Board of Trade meeting, has called a meeting for Monday afternoon, in which vigorous action will be taken against the non-active attitude of the head of the police force of Boston.

Mrs. Charlotte Smith, president of this organization, declared that if O'Meara still persisted in his declaration that he could do nothing with the conditions on the Common, that they would march 200 strong to the State House, lay the facts before the Governor and ask that O'Meara be removed from his position.

If Commissioner O'Meara had been at the meeting held by those business women yesterday afternoon, which was organized in three hours, and he had witnessed the fire that blazed from their eyes as they denounced the conditions in the Common as they had personally experienced them, his complacency would have been jarred—if anything short of official decapitation will accomplish that.

O'MEARA'S ATTITUDE IS STAGGERING.

Every newspaper in Boston demands, better police protection in the Common and is aghast at the apparent intention of the head of the force to make of it a zone where criminals may disport themselves unafraid of molestation by the officers of the law.

Mrs. Sara A. Conboy, one of the most prominent women connected with the wage earners of New England, in making an investigation of conditions on the Common, was instrumental in rescuing two small girls from the clutches of a human brute who had them already in his custody.

O'MEARA DENOUNCED BY BUSINESS WOMEN

Nearly one hundred business women in pl... of the Woman's Board of Trade and A suddenly called mass meeting at No. 420 Boylston street, yesterday afternoon, these two organizations there are between 800 and 700 business women—women who pay taxes, conduct large commercial enterprises and employ a large amount of help.

The feelings of the women when they read yesterday that O'Meara had calmly declared that he could do nothing to help

HALF MILLION WOMEN PARADE LONDON IN SUFFRAGE CAUSE

MRS. BELMONT IN THE LINE

Demand for Passage of Bill Giving Ballot to Women Property Owners.

LONDON, July 23.—Half a million women marched the streets this afternoon to urge the government to give the woman suffrage bill, recently passed by Parliament and then laid over, an opportunity to heard.

Never before in history has there been such a demonstration of women. Police lined the streets and at many points the spectators gave trouble.

The march of the suffragettes terminated at Hyde Park, where nearly 200 speakers addressed fifty mass meetings, attended by the half million of women and thousands more from the crowds of spectators.

There were many American women in the procession, including Mrs. O. P. H. Belmont. The parade resembled the great demonstrations of munifromed men, and a prominent feature was the suffragette band neatly attired in a distinctive uniform.

Two Hundred Actresses in Line.

The place of honor was held by the 617 women, who have been imprisoned as the result of the agitation. Actresses were there too, more than 200 strong, and women in the professions. Doctors, lawyers, nurses, newspaper women, and others from many walks of life went singing along the line of march.

It was an international demonstration, every country in Europe and all the colonies as well as the United tates being represented. Banners in every language were carried. Most of them however, were in English, and their number was beyond counting.

Some were carefully guarded. These were the "battle flags," the banners and transparencies carried in previous demonstrations in which the police took a hand.

Irish Women in Green.

Scotch women had three share in the procession, as did the Irish. The latter were clad in green. The suffragette jiu jitsu corps, which has been recently organized for the preservations of order at public meetings, marched as a special guard of honor to Mrs. Parkhurst and her two daughters, leaders of the cause here.

The rear guard was composed of suffragette cavalry, uniformed and well mounted. The marchers were apparently well received for the most part.

The parade is believed to be of great significance as giving the politicians orders a line on the public's attitude toward the recent bill, which led to the demonstration —the bill giving the franchise to 1,000,000 women property holders.

CONFERS WITH MAYOR.

Representative Callahan Has Talk Over Congressional Situation.

FALMOUTH HEIGHTS, July 23.—Representative Joseph F. Callahan slipped one across on the other anti-Keliher candidates for Congress in the Ninth District when he visited Mayor John F. Fitzgerald at his Summer home to-day and had a lengthy conference with him on the Congressional situation. Efforts were made to convince the "Little General" that the Ward 9 statesman was the only logical candidate to defeat Congressman Keliher's aspirations for a fifth term.

It is understood the Mayor is inclined to favor Councilor William F. Murray as the candidate to take Keliher's measure. There was no announced change in these plans as the result of to-day's conference.

WOMAN SHOT DEAD BY AGED MAN SHE HAD BEFRIENDED; YOUNG SON SEES TRAGEDY

Springfield woman, who was killed in own home, and son, who saw mother's tragic death

MRS. ELEANOR SHEPHERD AND SON CHARLES

Slayer, Captured as He Held Fatal Revolver, Arraigned And Held to Murder Charge.

SPRINGFIELD, July 23.—Mrs. Eleanor Shepard, the wife of William H. Shepard, one of the best known railroad men in this city, was shot and killed to-day at her home by George E. Creley, the aged father of Shepard's first wife.

Mrs. F. E. Bartlett, the mother of the murdered woman, and the victim's thirteen-year-old son, Charles, looked on in an agony of terror while the old man snatched the weapon from his pocket and fired the fatal shot. So quickly was it done that they could not interfere.

Later, in a cell, Creley tried to take his own life and almost succeeded. He tried to strangle himself with a piece of tape taken from the lining of his coat. He was unsuccessful when lo was discovered by another prisoner.

Slayer's Insanity Suspected.

The Shepard family had been warned that the old man's mind was deranged and that it was dangerous to have him about the house. He had made his home with the Shepards for some years until a month ago, when it was deemed best to have him go elsewhere.

The tragedy took place just as Mrs. Shepard was in the midst of her preparations to go to Lake Pleasant for the family's Summer outing to-day. Mrs. Shepard, her son and her mother, Mrs. Bartlett, dropped in early in the morning to assist her daughter in her preparations to go away, were in the basement about 9 o'clock in the forenoon when the front door bell rang.

Mrs. Shepard ran upstairs and looked out through the hallway and caught sight of Creley standing at the door.

"Who is there?" asked her mother from below.

"Mr. Creley," replied the daughter.

"Don't open the door, dear," responded the mother. "I am afraid of him."

Mrs. Shepard was a very kind-hearted woman, and she did not like to turn the old man away. She saw that he carried a carpet bag and reasoned that he was on his way to visit relatives elsewhere. She opened the door and Creley walked in. Mrs. Bartlett and Mrs. Shepard's son, Charles, walked upstairs and took seats in the parlor.

Had Revolver in Pocket.

They all chatted about ordinary affairs for a few minutes. Creley seemed to be in his right mind, and there was nothing in his demeanor to indicate that he was a lunatic.

"I wish you'd write the address of Mrs. Henry Bassett of Worcester on a card for me," Creley requested.

Mrs. Shepard replied Mrs. Shepard, and she went to a writing desk in an alcove off the parlor.

Mrs. Shepard presented a blank card and began to write the name. She had written this: "Mrs. Henry Bas—" Then she looked up and asked:

"Mr. Creley, do you spell 'Bassett with one s or two?"

By this time the old man had arose to his feet and was looking among the contents of his bag, in which he seemed to have letters and papers for consulting. Still there did not seem to be anything wrong with him until the question was put to him.

Just as soon as Mrs. Shepard got out the words he grabbed a revolver from his hip pocket, and advancing poked it into her face and pulled the trigger.

The Fatal Shot.

There was a report and a stain on the left cheek of the woman told where the bullet had lodged. Mrs. Shepard screamed and ran hysterically down the stairway to the basement. Her mother followed. At the foot of the stairs the injured woman fell in a heap. She lay breathing but not without being able to speak a word. Mrs. Bartlett rushed out for help and the basement house in which the Shepards lived, which is No. 62 Park street, was aroused. Thomas Lewis, the janitor, appeared.

"Who did this?" he inquired.

"Creley," cried Mrs. Bartlett. "Catch him, he's going out the front way."

The janitor ran to the front of the house and met the old man, who carried his revolver in his hand. He tried to frighten the janitor off by flourishing the weapon, but Lewis captured the aggressor and held him until Inspector Ritchie of the local police force reached the scene and put the handcuffs on him.

Creley was taken to the police station and then to the morgue, where a brief examination was made of the body of the victim. Dr. Ritchie found that she was dead. An examination of the desk where Mrs. Shepard was sitting when she was shot disclosed the card upon which she had written part of the name and just after the last letter she had made there was a fifty rod spot that looked like a period. It was the victim's blood.

On the way to the station house, Creley asked:

"Was Mrs. Shepard badly hurt?"

"She is dead," was the reply.

"I am sorry," he said.

Friends Think Him Guilty.

The prisoner was taken directly to court, it being in session at the time. He was charged with murder in the first degree without ceremony and was held without bail for an examination later.

"Where did you get the revolver?" the police asked Creley.

"I bought it at a pawnshop last Wednesday," he replied.

"What did you get it?"

"I learned that they were going to send me to Northampton to an asylum and I made up my mind that I would not go. Mr. Shepard would not let me. Each time the shooting took place. He was told by his daughter spoke in a kindly manner to him and was ready to do anything she asked of him.

"So when he asked her to write the name on the card she went at once to her desk. Then the awful thing happened. It was done so quickly that I did not have time to spring forward and grasp the weapon from his hand.

"I ran down stairs after my daughter and found her lying at the foot of the stairs. I cried out for her to speak to me, but she could not speak. She had been shot through the cheek and the bullet had gone into the brain. The old man had fired but one shot, and it had proven fatal."

The police will have Creley examined as to his sanity. There seems to be no doubt but that his mind is unhinged.

ALL HOPE GONE, RIVET AWAITS DEATH IN ELECTRIC CHAIR

Lowell Slayer, to Be Electrocuted, Sleeps Soundly and Enjoys Life in Cell.

NAPOLEON J. RIVET, condemned to death for the murder of Joseph G. Gailloux, at Lowell, has given up hope of a respite by the Governor and now sits in the death cell of Charlestown prison awaiting the summons by the guard.

"Rivet, are you ready?" That is the regulation question for the condemned. It is believed that he will hear these words that will summon him to the electric chair between the hours of midnight Tuesday and the following sunrise.

The doomed prisoner sleeps soundly, eats with a keen appetite and gets a good deal of pleasure out of the perusal of books and magazines. He chats on questions of the day with his death guards.

Cheered by Priest.

Rivet has received fewer visitors than any other condemned man who ever awaited execution in the Charlestown State Prison. He is said to be one of the most intelligent men sentenced to die in the chair.

Rivet's father, mother and two sisters visited him as he sat in his cell in murderer's row. At the sight of the son and brother in the cell from which they knew he would never leave but to take his short journey to death, the condemned man's family burst into tears which they could not restrain. Rivet, on the other hand, showed no signs of emotion.

The one person who deserves credit for Rivet's display of courage in the face of certain death, is the Rev. Father Augustine D. Malley, pastor of St. Mary's Church and Catholic chaplain of the State Prison. For a day passes but Rivet receives a visit from Father Malley, and some encouraging message is given to the condemned man by the chaplain.

When the last call comes, Father Malley will be with Rivet. He will meet him at the door of the cell and will precede him to the death chamber. When the final moment arrives, Rivet may need many encouraging words and Father Malley will be prepared to deliver them.

With eight witnesses dead the Governor must demands present at the execution. They will be in the house of death. Rivet will be led to the chair. He will then be strapped in, and if necessary, Father Malley with crufix unraised, will offer consolation to the man at the critical moment.

Then Rivet is called from his cell, he will be dressed in new clothing. The left trouser leg will be slit, a spot on the head will be shaved and after he is in the chair with the electrodes in place, Warden Bridges will flash the signal to the electrician, who is hidden behind a screen in the near left corner of the death chamber.

Cane is Death Signal.

The raising of a black cane that Warden Bridges carries is the signal for the death dealing current to be sent coursing through the body of Rivet. He will be the tenth man put to death at the Charlestown prison. The last execution was that of the three Chinese who were sentenced to death for the "shoot-up" in Chinatown in Rivet was sentenced to die on February 27, 1908. The murder was a most brutal one. Gailloux was struck on the head with an iron pipe, and as he lay dying the murderer poured sulphuric acid down his victims throat. Before he left the plumbing shop where the crime was committed, the slayer turned in the gas.

Rivet's defence was an alibi. The jury was out but thirty-five minutes. It returned a verdict February 4, 1909, after a trial lasting nearly a week. He was a prisoner in the East Cambridge jail from the time that he was convicted until he was removed to the State Prison at Charlestown. He is twenty-seven years old and had been a mill operative in Lowell, but had no permanent advertising.

The condemned man and the victim were partners for many months before the crime. Rivet, who was then working as an insurance solicitor, took out a policy for $1,000 on the life of Gailloux, who was working in a plumbing shop on Hall street, Lowell. Rivet was the beneficiary of this policy.

All the premiums on the policy, that had become due up to the time of Gailloux's death, had been paid by Rivet. Nothing standing the exceptions that were filed with the Supreme Court, and the petition to the Governor Draper containing scores of names of prominent men in Lowell, Rivet's life could not be saved.

TODAY TO BE HOTTER.

East Wind Only Can Relieve Us From Hot Wave.

Hotter weather to-day and hot weather to-morrow. No relief in sight for some days yet, according to the local weather forecaster. He puts in the promise of an east wind somewhere from the sea, as it usually does on Sunday, and making conditions pleasant or even cool.

The present "Pale and continued warm, Sunday and Monday; Hotter weather to-day," is the forecast.

Darius E. Robbins, 74, of Harwich, was overcome by the heat on India Wharf yesterday afternoon. He was taken to the Relief Hospital.

The temperature was 89 yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock. To-morrow the forecaster looks for 90 or even 92 degrees of heat.

Charlestown Man Held Up on Tremont Row in Glare of Arc Lights.

UNDER the glare of hundreds of flashing electric lights and right in front of a crowded theatre in Tremont to wait the head of Hanover street, the patrons up with their cash on Saturday night holiday throng, two men last night struck down an unsuspecting citizen, who was talking with a woman friend, robbed him, and tore down the street with two policemen and a great crowd in mad pursuit.

The policemen, aided by the crowd, finally captured two men. They were locked up on the state prison, who was rendered unconscious by a blow in the face. was taken to the Relief Hospital. When he was revived he was held as a witness against the suspected highway robbers.

At about 7:30 last night Nicholas G. Kiley of No. 116 Rutherford avenue, Charlestown, was standing in front of the Star theatre chatting with a woman friend. He felt a hand stealing stealthily into his pockets and at once grabbed the arm of a thief. The whole struggled. Kiley was felled to the sidewalk by a blow in the face. He was rendered unconscious.

Policemen Chase Men.

The special policeman in front of the theatre saw two men dart away and run down Tremont street. The special officer at once started in pursuit. He was joined by Patrolman Thomas J. Mahoney of Station 2 and a big crowd.

At the corner of Elm and Harrison avenue two policemen rushed about but were seized by several men in the crowd. The two thieves free and sought to borrow in the crowds and escape the clutches of those who could get to them because of the throng.

Just then a street car came down the street scattering the people in every direction. The special officer and Mahoney plunged through and arrested two men near Knight's dining room. They were taken to Station 2 where they gave their names and residences as Samuel Goodwin, eighteen years of age, No. 17 Alston street, West End, and David Brodsky, eighteen, No. 39 Thorndike street Roxbury. They are held under charges of highway robbery.

Victim Sent to Hospital.

The unconscious Kiley was taken into the drug store and then in an ambulance to the Relief Hospital. There he was revived and then taken to the police station where he was held as a witness against the two men who had been brought to court to-morrow morning.

Kiley's watch had been taken from his pockets. In Goodwin's pockets the officers found a watch and $7.85.

About a half hour later a man whose face was covered with blood and whose face had his head, but even thrown over his shoulder, was seen to run down the street through the crowds pursued by a policeman. He was arrested from where the assault and robbery had taken place. The fellow gave his name as Sowin, but his wounds held till the first man who did the deed. Sowin was held on a slight charge of disorderly conduct. He was released from bail by Lieutenant Brower of the police force.

Kiley, who is employed by Washington Street, is doing well. He is unmarried.

FREIGHT MAN HELD FOR BIG ROBBERY

PROVIDENCE, July 23.—In the arrest of Harold Green, a freight handler employed by the New York New Haven & Hartford Railroad and Hyman Glazman, a grocer, the police believe that they have unraveled the cause of the mysterious disappearance of goods and wares which have vanished from the Fox Point station within the past few months. The police and railroad authorities assert that fully $15,000 worth of goods have been stolen from the railroad wharves within that period of time.

For months the police have been watching the movements of the employes of the road and have noted that Green left for the goods were being taken by someone in the employ of the railroad from the railroad office.

Hughes, who is married and has three children, lives at No. 32 Wayne street. He is well known in Boston and has been a trusted employe of the railroad for the past few years. The police charge him with "falsifying freight slips."

The police charge that Hughes, who is head clerk of the shipping force at Fox Point, would order the workmen on the wharf to set aside certain goods which were to be shipped to New York. There a wagon would drive up and take away the stolen articles. Hughes, it is alleged, would then falsify the freight slips. The police charge that on Thursday night drove up to the wharf, received a roll of cloth and departed. He was arrested at 2:30 Glazman was arrested on the charge of receiving stolen goods. He was arraigned before Judge Brockert in the Sixth Division Court this morning. There he was held for the grand jury. Hughes was taken to the Providence jail. He will be arraigned in court Monday.

Monarchs of Austria, Germany and Spain Are in Serious Physical Condition.

LONDON, July 23.—Europe is beginning to worry seriously over the health of three of her rulers—Kaiser Franz Josef of Austria, Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany and King Alfonso of Spain.

Franz Josef is breaking down from old age. The slightest exertion exhausts him, and he frequently has lapses from consciousness. At best corriires feel that his death is only a matter of a few months.

It is an open secret that Wilhelm's recent complaint of a "boil on the wrist" was really a serious matter. His former high spirits have given way to melancholy and depression to an alarming extent.

Alfonso, like Wilhelm, suffers from a painful malady of the ear, which Dr. Moure, the famous Bordeaux specialist, has tried calnly for more than a year to relieve. Alfonso's ear trouble, like the Kaiser's recent boil, however, is unquestionably symptomatic of general disorganization in the blood. He seems to be a man whose health as well as nerves have collapsed completely.

GOVERNOR ON SEA WITH THE RESERVES

The Massachusetts Naval reserve companies are now at sea on the battleship Vermont and the cruiser Chicago, bound for Hampton Roads, Virginia, where they will join the big fleet manned by sea militia from other States. The Bay State sailor boys sailed from Boston yesterday with Gov. Eben S. Draper aboard the Chicago, which is the flagship of the Atlantic squadron organized for the cruise. The Vermont and Chicago are due in Gardiner's Bay to-day. They will meet warships bearing the Rhode Island and the Connecticut reserves. The squadron will then sail south and to Hampton Roads there will be a grand rendezvous of the monitors, battleships and other naval craft manned by the reserves of Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New oYrk, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, District of Columbia and Maryland.

The Vermont and Chicago are due in the Roads on Tuesday, and back in the Bay State on Friday. All the while the Massachusetts sailor boys will be trained in actual sea duty on war-ships. They will engage in every kind of work except target practice and will be inspected by officers of the U. S. Navy. Governor Draper will stay with the boys all through the cruise. It is the first time a Governor of Massachusetts ever went on such a trip automobiles.

FOOTPAD CAPTURED BY PLUCKY VICTIM

Dorchester Man Holds on to Highwayman Until Help Arrives.

Angus Leach, a middle-aged man, living at No. 42 Mowry street, Dorchester, though badly beaten and dragged from the road into a clump of bushes, held to a young robber late last night until help came and the man was captured. Leach was robbed of $35 and a gold watch and chain, for which the police are hunting now.

At the Dorchester Police Station the man gave his name as Frank I. Rogers, twenty-two years old and his home as No. 18 Genesee street, South End.

The daring hold-up was committed just after 9 o'clock while Leach was on his way home in Columbia Road. Just as he passed in front of the William H. Russell School where there are bushes on both sides of the road, a man jumped out behind Leach.

Leach was struck a stunning blow on the back of the head. He fell unconscious during which time his pockets were rifled. He revived, seized his assailant and called lustily for help.

Two boys ran up and as they did so the robber broke away and ran down Columbia road and right into Patrolman James Wilkerson's arms. He tried hard to escape but was overpowered. No money was found in his pockets and the police went to the scene of the holdup to-day to find what was taken from Leach if possible.

GLAD CHASE IS ENDED.

Marshall, Alige Coleman Accomplice, No Longer Under Strain.

John R. Marshall, arrested in Philadelphia under Federal indictment charging him with conspiring with Martin J. Walsh and William J. (Big Bill) Kelliher in aiding and abetting George W. Coleman to loot the National City Bank of Cambridge, told some of his friends that he was glad he had been arrested, as his captive has pushed the pressure from the third degree experiencing. He said he was not guilty, and that his innocence would be proved. He asserted that he was entirely willing to come back to Boston.

Assistant United States District Attorney Edward P. Grimley was notified by District Attorney Thompson of Philadelphia that the arrangement where by he and commitment to jail in default of $10,000 bail.

Mr. Grimland expects that Marshall will be brought to Boston Tuesday or Wednesday. The assistant district attorney to-day will make application for Marshall's removal to Boston.

Attorney Edward McLaine of this city, counsel for Mrs. Nellie Penn, who claims to be Mrs. Marshall, says he is also Marshall's attorney.

JILTED ROMEO NURSES AGONIZED HEART AND PRINTS MORE LETTERS

NEW YORK, July 23.—"Siegfried" Griswold has an idea to-night that he may have better luck prosecuting a suit for slander against "Brunhilde" Helen Woodruff Smith, the wealthy Stamford woman, than he will in his breach of promise case against her. He professed to be very angry over the "names" he has been called when seen at the offices of his attorney and insisted that he would "make her suffer before he was through." In the meanwhile the handsome divorcee has retired to her Stamford home and declines to further comment on the suit.

Griswold is chiefly angered because Miss Smith has characterised him, in so many words, as a blackmailer. He admits that he borrowed some money from Miss Smith while she was still accepting his attentions, but says he gave her his note for it and that it was a regular business transaction.

"She calls me a beggar and says I was after her money," he declared, "but the fact is that every cent I got from her I returned except $800 and she has my note for that money. She gave me a ring and a couple of scarfpins, and some other things, but she gave them to me because she loved me and I loved her.

Suitor Offered a Salary.

"Why, when I was suffering with eye strain in 1905 and was employed in the Corn Exchange Bank, she sent for me. 'Siegie dear,' she said to me, 'why not take place and come up here to Stamford and act as my secretary. I will pay you a salary and we can have exceptional times together without you ruining your eyesight.'

"I never agreed to any specific salary, but occasionally she would give me small sums. I consider that I earned them and a great deal more. I had to make photographs and things for guests and do lots of things for her.

Griswold's mother issued a statement this afternoon in which she denied that she had anything to do with the institution of the suit and defended her from the charge that he is seeking to blackmail Miss Smith. She wound it up by saying:

"I defy the defendant to prove that I am the instigator of this suit or that my son is a beggar or perjurer."

New letters given out by Griswold to-day throw an interesting side light on the relations between them, which Griswold declares led Miss Smith to promise to become his bride. In one she is deeply concerned about his health, and advises him how to take care of himself. Another calls him "Dearest Ruzzie" and in a third she refers to "dodging behind the kitchen door."

Trying to Muzzle Romeo.

Miss Smith came to this city from her country home, Linden Lodge to consult a lawyer as to the best way to prevent further publication of her Brunhilde-Siegfried" letters. It was decided not to obtain an injunction, and she returned to her home.

It was in the office of his attorney at No. 346 Broadway, that Griswold, for the first time told his side of the case.

"She told friends of hers and afterward told me," said Griswold, that she loved me at first sight, when I met met her on Easter day, 1901. When she met me she gazed fixedly into my eyes, and afterward she said that she knew at that moment that she had met her soul mate. She was sure that she met me in a former existence."

The letters just made public are the most interesting yet published. Here is one dated July 4, 1904:

Dear Runzelli: My for-get-me-not letter illustrating our present position, reached me safely at Greenport, was delighted with the sunflower symbolic poem, and everything—included the little picture of "Me and You." I have endeavored to make a picture of the other page, also entitled "Me and You" before and after the "THE CRUISE" as it were. At least I hope so.

This will be posted at Port Jond by trusting he will remember to put it in Peter's mail box after walking several miles.

The days have been beautiful—also the nights on deck. CHANCE LOVE. I would like to hear from you at New Haven. Address Peqiot Association. Yale Viking, New Haven, Conn.

Put on the return mark in case it is delayed, etc. Expect to be at N. P. Sunday. Will not reach Stamford till next week sometime. How does the moon work?

BRUNHILDE your sunflower.

Love, Kisses and a Cold.

Another, dated Linden Lodge, instructs Ruzzie how to treat cold which had laid him out. It contains the "I kiss" code in plenty. It follows:

October 12, 1908. Linden Lodge, Stamford, Ct.

Dear little Ruzzie—I was so very sorry to learn to-day that you have been poorly again. I send you a bunch of grass in the fov not a bouquet, but that wouldn't half ensign. I shall been wondering why I didn't hear from you or see you. Thought you were busy with something never dreaming you were sick. Poor little dear.

Drink lots of hot water before meals (half hour or an hour before) and breathe deeply, and if you can keep me close in your arms dearie, always remember that I am ready to help in any way I can.

Only let me know. I shall try to see you if you say come and in the meantime I am here thinking of you, here in the cabin, and in yours and will stay so to the end.

A tribe and a HALF.

Fair Open Arms.

A postal written on board the Viking apparently carries a photograph of the steamer Nantucket at the Nantucket wharf on one side and the name Viking on the other. Inscribed a pair of arms, which Mr. Griswold identified as his former admirer's code signal for "come waiting." The postal reads:

Dar Sgrd—Started a letter on board and was blown away. Am now on shore, have received your card. Where are you stopping? Oh, ye Gods, how I long for home and Ruzzie. Will write soon. Go to Marblehead to-morrow—last stop. Am coming home soon. Will be back. Came near taking steamer for Bridgewater and Stamford. Ever yours ever.

H.

A postal shows a girl at the seashore riding on the edge of a very huge wave, under which is printed, "Up so lonesome without you. This one is addressed to Russia," and on it is written "offr you." On another which carries the picture of a girl looking behind a screen, is written "Between you and me Ruzzie I would like to see you very soon upon arriving to Rabbitville again." It is signed "H'LOLE" which Mr. Griswold says is intended to mean Brunhilde. The postals as illustrations, speak for themselves.

There are some new letters which additional to those already printed will be introduced in court in the case. If it shall come to trial.

Sunday. Dear Ruzzie—Am just returning from the city yesterday I learned that Uncle Walter (W. M. Smith) is critically ill and a New York doctor sent for. All the family are there. Commodore nervous and perhaps prevent him from coming to Stamford to-morrow. Therefore, I thought we better await further developments as investigation. He called up George H. Gordon, New England secretary, in Boston, and learned that Nelson was not connected with the Boy Scouts. Nelson has been run out of the city. He told the police he intended to organize a union of newsboys in this city.

IMPOSTER CAUGHT.

Represented Self as Agent of Boy Scout Movement.

BROCKTON, July 23. — Representing himself as an agent of the American Boy Scout movement, Joseph Nelson, alias Benjamin Savits, of Boston, tried to collect fees from Brockton girls who wanted to become scouts. The police board of it and Officer George Perkins conducted an investigation. He called up George H. Gordon, New England secretary, in Boston, and learned that Nelson was not connected with the Boy Scouts. Nelson has been run out of the city. He told the police he intended to organize a union of newsboys in this city.

GIRL A FIRE HEROINE BY AID OF A SHOE

MISS JENNIE DOOR, of No. 3 Decatur street, South End, employed as head waitress in Bailey's restaurant, No. 34 Beach street, yesterday afternoon proved herself a fire heroine. She saved the life of Patrick Ahearn, a lodger, at No. 56 Beach street, by awaking him in time to escape from flames which threatened to destroy the house.

The lodging house is run by Eugene Riley. It is his custom to keep a lighted lamp in the hallway on the second floor leading to the street stairway. Yesterday the heat from the burner was so intense that it melted the solder of the bracket, causing the lamp to fall. The oil was scattered on the stairs and the lamp rolled down to the doorway, leaving the place in flames.

Miss Door, who was next door, heard the lamp fall. Running to the door she saw flames and smoke pouring through the cracks. She tried to open the door. It was locked. Taking off her shoe she broke a pane of glass in the doorway and pulled the latter cord of the door.

Ahearn was asleep in his room on the top floor. Miss Door's knock was so powerful that her summons awoke Ahearn. Groping his way through the smoke-filled hallway he made for the street stairway. Escape was cut off. Miss Door told him to run for the fire escape. He did so but was told, thereby saving his life.

In the meantime Riley had reached the fire department. The request made short work of the fire, which was confined to the doorway.

"When I heard the lamp fall in the entry I rushed to the street to see what was the trouble," said Miss Door. "The doorway of the lodging house was blazing furiously and one door itself was locked. I felt sure some one was in the house and would be burned to death. I broke in the door and I know I'd have to break it. Then I yelled 'Fire! Fire!' which awoke Mr. Ahearn."

BOY FLYING A KITE FALLS FIFTY FEET

Little Willie Donovan Has a Fractured Skull as Result of Tumble From Roof.

WILLIE DONOVAN, eight years old, was flying a kite on the roof of his house, No. 97 Henry street, Charlestown, yesterday. A strong gust of wind caused the string to snap and the kite flew away. Willie chased the trailing string to the edge of the roof and over. He fell fifty feet into the yard and the noise of his fall caused his mother to rush from her kitchen into the yard, where she found Willie on his return to town a lighted lamp in the hallway on the second floor leading to the street stairway. Yesterday the heat from the burner was so intense that it melted the solder of the bracket, causing the lamp to fall. The oil was scattered on the stairs and the lamp rolled down to the doorway, leaving the place in flames.

Escape was cut off. This door told him to run for the fire escape. He did so but was told, thereby saving his life.

RESCUES DROWNING BOY JUST IN TIME

Lee A. Landers, eighteen, living at No. 64 Harding Terrace, East Dedham, plunged into the treacherous waters of the Merchants Woolen Mill Pond in East Dedham yesterday afternoon and rescued nine-year-old Fred G. Kresling, Jr., as the lad was sinking for the third time.

Fred Kresling, Jr., and some other boys, were poking when Freddy lost his balance and toppled into the water. His chums, like him, could not swim, so they shouted for help.

Leo Landers rushed to the pond.

NEW MYSTERY IN CHARLTON CASE

Record of Crime Rushed Here From Italy Fails to Reach Washington.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—There is mystery in the fate of the record in the case of Porter Charlton who confessed to the murder of his wife at Lake Como, Italy. Two weeks ago it was supposed to have started on its way to the United States. So far it has not arrived and no tidings of it have been received.

Italian authorities announced more than two weeks ago that they would present a record of the crime as a preliminary to the extradition of the young American charged with the deed. They said that this record would go to London to be transmitted from there by a "fast steamer."

Since then a number of fast steamers have crossed the Atlantic. Aboard none of them, however, so far as the State Department knows, has the record been shipped. It may still be in London or it may not have even arrived there. It may not even be sent. In some quarters the doubt is expressed as to the "Record ever having" up.

BANDITS HOLD-UP TRAIN.

Force Passengers at Point of Pistol to Give up Valuables.

WEEHAWKEN, July 23.—Five masked and armed bandits held up train No. 105 on the New York, Ontario & Western Railroad just outside the limits of this place. Four of the robbers invaded the train and forced a number of passengers to give up their valuables at the point of a pistol. One man was left outside on guard to warn the others inside. The four left the train and made their escape but the man outside was arrested. The train left here at 6:15 this evening bound for the northern part of the State.

The four entered one of the coaches from both ends. Two stood in the forward end of the car and covered the score or more passengers with revolvers while the other two advanced from the rear and proceeded to go through the pockets of the passengers.

O'MEARA IS SUED.

Commissioner Is Mixed Up with a Mortgaged Estate.

Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara is one of the defendants to an equity action in the Massachusetts Superior Court which seeks to force him, Albert Ammann and Patrick Sullivan to pay over to Benjamin Tyler and Alice G. Clapp, trustees under the will of Curtis C. Nichols, the balance of proceeds under a mortgage foreclosure sale.

O'Meara took a mortgage for $900 on Blue Hill avenue property which was sold by foreclosure by Ammann, who is an auctioneer. It is said the mortgage and other charges were paid $608.55 remained in the hands of O'Meara and Ammann and the trustees of the Nichols estate declare that a second mortgage on the property entitles them to receive this amount. But administrator of the estate of Della E. Sullivan, who owned the property, refuses to allow it and the auctioneer letting the trustees have the balance money.

DRAPER GETS AMES WARNING TO KEEP HIS HANDS OFF

Congressman's Secretary Declares It Will Be Governor's Own Fault If Defeated.

JOSEPH N. Legarre, Secretary to Congressman Butler Ames of Lowell ever since the young congressman butted in, ten years ago, and himself one of the best politicians in Middlesex county, if not in Massachusetts, declares emphatically that if the Republican state ticket goes to smash this fall on the rocks of factional ism, Governor Draper and Lieutenant Governor Frothingham will have themselves to blame but themselves.

Legarre was discussing the split with which Draper and Frothingham have declared political warfare on the Republican party of Henry Cabot Lodge is the one and only Republican candidate for the United States Senate and that they are for him.

Ames's secretary did not volunteer the warning to Draper and Frothingham. He had talked at some length concerning the state-wide campaign which Ames will make against Lodge. He had said that the issue rests with the people. He had described how Ames plans to get the question before the Republicans of the State by placing his Ames candidates for House and Senate before them in each of the 240 House districts and 40 Senate districts.

Will Stump State.

"The caucuses will be held in October," said Legarre, "and Congressman Ames will give the month of September to a stumping tour in the course of which he will speak directly to every Republican in the State. Mr. Lodge has been elected with him, as he boasts and has always boasted. Mr. Ames will be satisfied with the plain people of the Republican party.

"Lodge has the machine. Nobody can doubt that. We know it and are glad of it. But there'll be an anti-machine fight, such as the Republicans of Massachusetts have never engaged in. And 'twill be a fight to a finish, mark my word. These leaders probably little realize the extent of the feeling against them during this year.

"It was then that Mr. Legarre was asked this question:

"You think if you wreck the Republican ticket this fall? What if, as a result of your fight on Lodge and the Lodge machine, Governor Draper is defeated?"

Legarre didn't hesitate a moment.

"If Draper and Frothingham are unbiased because of the campaign Congressman Ames proposes to make against the Republican boss of Massachusetts, that is their own affair. People don't forget. They have gone out of their way, on at least two occasions recently, to declare that Lodge is their candidate for the United States senate.

Prudence Is Counselled.

"Another Republican is a candidate with Mr. Lodge for the United States senatorship. Governor Draper and Lieutenant Governor Frothingham will need the time of every loyal voter Republican and the votes of every Republican in Massachusetts who is willing to listen to him and vote for his candidates before election day.

"Prudence, if nothing else, prudence if nothing else, may counsel Governor Draper and the lieutenant-governor to conclude agreement with Lodge and leave keep hands off in this contest of Ames against Lodge. Lodge is the candidate of—

"These gentlemen may not realize it, but Butler Ames has friends as thoroughly devoted to him and his success as any who are now about Massachusetts man in public life. If Ames is to be defeated he will be without spirit—which he is far from being—he must not be defeated by the best friends of his.

"From the standpoint of party success it is quite bad enough to have the state committee, of which Mr. Lodge is chairman, however, should present at least the semblance of neutrality. As a Republican Butler Ames has the same rights—or ought to be accorded the same—as Henry Cabot Lodge. I trust that some of us still have any Fairness accorded to us in this kind of a thing. You touched the spot and you have our answer."

Starts Out To-morrow.

Ames will be back from Washington today. To-morrow, with Legarre in the automobile with him, the congressman will begin his stump tour of all the cities and towns of the State. They start in Middlesex county.

"This business of hunting for 'Ames sentiment throughout the State," said Legarre—who, by the way, looks enough like Postmaster General Frank H. Hitchcock to be his brother—"is in certain aspects ludicrous.

"If you take notice, they are not asking anybody about Lodge-Ames sentiment except the chairmen of town and city committees. That's the machine, isn't it? Of course the machine is for Lodge.

"What these 'polls' are for is to get it up to the plain people: 'Are you satisfied with the course of Henry Cabot Lodge as statesman and political dictator? Do you think he ought to have a fourth term of six years in the Senate?' Why, certainly. He would help a lot if folks would remember the conditions that confronted Mr. Ames when he made his first try for Congress. The Republican Machines and corporations were against us everywhere. They 'not going to have a looking,' they said. We got 94 out of 12 delegates."

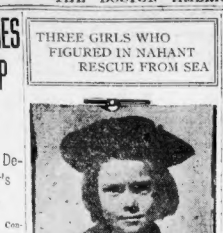
THREE GIRLS WHO FIGURED IN NAHANT RESCUE FROM SEA



RUTH WALTON

GRACE AND ELMA FURBUSH

GIRL IS SAVED FROM DEATH BY SIGN LANGUAGE

MISS RUTH WALTON was saved from drowning at Nahant yesterday by the courage of seventeen-year-old elma Furbush and her acquaintance with the deaf and dumb alphabet.

Miss Furbush, who is a strong swimmer, was apprised of the danger of her friend by her deaf and dumb sister, Grace, who stood on the wharf and signaled to her in the sign language.

She reached Miss Walton just in time and carried her with great difficulty to the steamship pier. Miss Furbush was completely exhausted, but refused to release her hold even when both sank beneath the surface. Instead she struggled on to safety.

The Furbush girls are the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Furbush of No. 318 Chatham street, Lynn. They were visiting Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Walton of White street, Nahant.

Yesterday afternoon elma and Ruth Walton went in swimming near the steamship pier at the foot of White street. Grace Furbush walked down on the pier to watch the swimmers. Ruth had been taught to swim by her sister, but is a novice, a few days before, and did not venture far from the street end, as the water is soon 100 feet from shore. She rounded the corner of the pier and lost sight of Ruth.

A few minutes later she noticed her sister standing at the end of the pier and waved to her. Miss Walton grace replied out with her hands:

"Ruth is drowning."

Selma knew the language from long practice with her sister, and, turning, saw indirectly towards Ruth. Ruth had tried to follow the swimmer, but stepped in deep water and lost heart and sank.

"Treat water," called elma, but Ruth was so frightened she did not know what treat water meant, and she went under for the second time. Then she appeared again. Zelma was beside her, turned her over on her back and began to swim with her towards teh pier, sixty feet distant.

Once both girls went under water, but elma fought her way back to the surface with her head above water, and the pier. There Grace pulled the girls up beside her. Then she celebrated the rescue by fainting.

Ruth and Grace quickly recovered.

LABOR IS FIXING UP A DOSE FOR DRAPER

The Political Activity Committee of the Massachusetts State Branch, American Federation of Labor, met yesterday in Wells Memorial Hall to consider arrangements for a labor-political conference to be held in Boston next month.

All the subsidiary organizations throughout the State had been sounded about sending delegates to next Sunday's meeting. Without exception the replies read yesterday were in the affirmative.

The committee is made up of E. Gerry Brown of Brockton, James W. Wall of Worcester and Fred J. Knesland of Boston.

The principal purpose of the committee, at this time, one of its members said, is to encompass the defeat of Governor Draper. "Because," it said, "of Draper's hostile antagonism towards labor bills in general as well as the Eight Hour bill and Anti-Injunction bill last year."

Brown, Wall and Knesland were all on the stump against Draper last year and in favor of Vahey and Foss.

The great reaction in the Republican vote was principally in the industrial centres, they believe, and to have been due to the activity and effort of unionized wage-earners.

NEW YORK, July 23.—Orlando Harriman, brother of the late Edward H. Harriman, and president of the Brighton Beach Development company, admitted to-night that anonymous letter writers had threatened complete destruction to the Brighton Beach baths.

VAHEY CONDEMNS JUDGE-MADE LAW

nor at the field day of St. Patrick's church in Watertown yesterday. The candidate was among his friends and townsmen and was tendered a great reception.

"When Mr. Vahey is governor," said Father Ambrose J. Roache, who was in charge of the field day, "he will not be for the corporations and against the people."

Frerick J. Mansfield, secretary for the American Federation of Labor, sent a telegram to Mr. Vahey as did Dennis D. Driscoll, secretary and treasurer of the State Federation of Labor. The speaker of the day was Mr. Vahey's running mate.

"For years we have been trying to secure the enactment into law of the principle of a workingman's compensation act. What we need is this kind of a governor to give a law which will compel employers to give their employees a certain compensation in the event of injury, rather than leave it to the mercy of the employer and the amount of their earning capacity, or else to give the injured party a fighting suit to recover what they are justly entitled to.

"It is imperative that you gentlemen of the labor party should support and help you who do not, should join in the movement which will bring about this wonderful result.

"Another situation which must be dealt with speedily is the doctrine of the assumption of risk. This is judge-made law and has been stretched to its farthest limit in the interpretation by judges of our trial courts in the right arbitrarily to say that a man has, or has not, assumed the risk of his employment and prevent him from recovering by directing the jury to return a verdict against him. Our law books are filled with cases in which the greatest injustice has been done by reason of this nefarious doctrine. The question of the assumption of risk should be left to the jury to determine.

Many meetings and interested sporting events were held. The winners were: Potato race—Won by Elmer Ford; second, James Connelly; Shoe lace race—Won by John Murphy; three legged race—Won by James Connelly and John Sullivan. In the evening there was a lively basket ball contest between the Newton High team and the Watertown Independents, the Newton team winning 20 to 12.

In the afternoon everybody got excited over the close struggle of the marshmallow roast. Mahoney, Sullivan and Wheelock secured first prize, and Hurley second prize.

Bell finally went to rout about it, and as Hopkinton looks of it he won—to a certain extent.

As the Court Views it.

Judge Richardson found that tee is of course a necessity, and that instances as Mrs. Wood appeared to be the only purveyor of tee in this neighborhood she would have to be considered a public utility. The learned court, Mr. Carr could not compel Mrs. Wood to sell tee, but he could compel the house to him. If he wanted tee, he would have to get Carr's every day. Tuesdays and Saturdays excepted. Mr. Carr, it is said, called for the delivery of tee on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

He finally went to rout about it, and as Hopkinton looks of it he won—to a certain extent.

Some More Who's-Who.

More of this Who's Who in Hopkinton, however. The town has an attorney of its own, if you want to know, and his name is George L. Hemenway. Edmund Hemenway is a brother of Alfred Hemenway, who was a law partner of Fellow in the law, up Boston way, as Ed. Carr can possibly tell.

The friends of Walter Wood and George Hall in the health of Mrs. Wood, in the Hopkinton was being run right and lawfully, and that no interference from the outside would get along without any interference. Mrs. Wood may feel sure that any Outsider who didn't like the way this town is being run could go some other place. Once in a while some rude person is suggested to such place where nobody gets lee.

Mr. Carr from Boston is to be almost an issue, so to speak, and then comes the Wood lawyer, Hall.

The lee business belongs to "Pa" Wood entirely speaking, but Mr. Wood isn't in the health of Mrs. Wood looks after the business.

Walter—Chairman of the Committee and Committee on Streets—drives the lee cart and strives to please.

HOPKINTON, July 23.—The chances are that you folks up to Boston failed to grasp, this week, the full significance of the finding by Judge Richardson in the Superior Court here, that Mrs. Almira Wood has got to sell ice to Mr. Ed. Carr, but that she needn't carry it in. Ed's got to come to the ice cart for it. If he wants the ice bad enough, he'll come.

There are some fewer than 2,000 people in Hopkinton, and you can well imagine what they are talking about just now, when Ed. Carr, a Boston lawyer—for all he's lived here five years—Hopkinton still calls him a Boston lawyer—has had Mrs. Almira Wood hailed into court for refusing to sell him ice.

Ice Dealer a Church Woman.

Mrs. Almire Wood is sixty years old, and one of the lovelies and sweetest and best women in town, say Hopkintonians. She has long been prominent in the church, and she is also prominent in the Order of the Eastern Star.

Mrs. Wood, moreover, was born a Claflin, and Claflin is a name honored, respected and lovedwell, almost, all over the Middlesex Country.

Then, along comes Ed. Carr, the Boston lawyer, a young man, and settles in our midst. Mr. Carr has offices on the eighth floor of 31 Milk street, Boston. Mrs. Wood—Hopkinton wasn't doing in just the right way. Mr. Carr, moreover, is not only being some lawyer, and Hopkinton, which is very much like Eighteen Century, looked at him and gasped.

First Kick Over Water.

Mr. Carr summed town water. The town extended a pipe down to the Carr place, supplying only the Carr faucets, and paid $200 for it.

Mr. Carr wanted sidewalks. The sidewalks come, too.

Mr. Carr put in the March town meeting and said maybe this here account of Walter L. Wood's ought to be paid, too, but he'd like to know something about the bills for the work Mr. Him letting a lawyer.

Walter L. Wood is the son of Mrs. Wood, by a former husband, Mr. Wood, in addition to being Superintendent of Streets, is a member of the Board of Selectmen.

There are three Selectmen, one of the two others is J. Lee Claflin—make a guess what his name—and J. Lee is Walter's uncle.

Hall, you will perceive, is Atty. Ed. Carr, of No. 81 Tremont Building; was for fresh ice in a rich.

Some More Who's-Who.

More of this Who's Who in Hopkinton, however. The town has an attorney of its own, if you want to know, and his name is George L. Hemenway. Edmund Hemenway is a brother of Alfred Hemenway, who was a law partner of Fellow in the law, up Boston way, as Ed. Carr can possibly tell.

'DIES' TO FOOL WIFE.

New Yorker Thought Death Notice Would Revive Love.

NEW YORK, July 23.—It is said every man who has the privilege of reading his own death notice written by himself. The latest person to enjoy it is John H. Butts, an insurance broker of Brooklyn, living at No. 307 West Forty-sixth street, Manhattan.

The notice was inserted by Buttls himself. Buttls was said as a smokerel to his friends until a call was made at No. 2501 Madison street. This is the home of W. H. Buttle, father of the supposed dead man. There was no corpse on the door and no evidence of mourning.

Mr. Buttle was alive and not inclined to be communicative, but explained that his desire was to reach the eyes of his wife with the advertisement. She is in Canada, and has, according to the husband, been away six months.

She has shown no disposition to return home, and Buttle believed if she heard he was dead she would come back.

DRIVER BADLY HURT.

Ice Wagon Smashed in Collision with Electric Car.

Bernard Parker, forty-eight, a driver, of No. 85 Oak street, Milton, was seriously injured when the ice wagon he was driving was smashed in a collision with an electric car of the Blue Hill street Railway Company last night at the foot of a steep incline near Brook road, Milton. Parker was thrown in the air when he was shaken up and the front of the car was damaged. One of the horses drawing the wagon was killed outright and the other was badly hurt. Parker was carried to the Mattapan branch of the Dorchester police station, and then home. He is suffering from a possible fracture of the skull.

MANY BABIES DIE.

Mortality Rate Greatly Increased in New York City.

NEW YORK, July 23.—There is much comment on every hand here at the alarming increase in the death rate of infants as shown by the report of the Bureau of Municipal Research.

The Department of Health denies that it has been guilty of neglect as charged in the report.

ENGLISH GIRL WHO IS CROSSING OCEAN FOR MARRIAGE VOWS

MISS LOUISA TOPHAM

WAITS IVERNIA TO WED SWEETHEART

Edward M. Webster Came From England in March, Bride Now on Way.

EDWARD M. WEBSTER, a skilled machinist for the General Electric Company, yesterday received many congratulations from friends and acquaintances upon the prospect of his early wedding with Miss Louisa Topham of Bradford, Eng., crowning a romantic boy and girl attachment, which has continued until manhood and womanhood.

Miss Topham is a passenger on the Ivernia, which is due to dock here next Thursday afternoon, when there will be a happy wedding and a reception in honor of the bride, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Topham. Her father is the former keeper of the Longport Board School of Bradford.

Edward Webster and Louisa Topham never knew what it was not to be friends. They were reared as neighbors and from the earliest time they can remember were sweethearts. They hardly know now when their friendship began, for to be married some day or other was always to them a matter of course. Webster learned the trade of a machinist and came to this country last March. He at once received a good position with the General Electric Company and came complete satisfaction.

He has roomed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Midgley of No. 30 Winnemurkett avenue, almost from the time of his arrival here. There he will take his bride and there the wedding reception will be held.

Mr. Webster hopes to have the Rev. Samuel Mielke, pastor of one of the Back Bay churches, officiate, as Mr. Mielke was pastor of the Leeds Road Baptist Church, Bradford, England, where Mr. Webster and Miss Topham attended for years.

All that Mr. Webster is worrying about now is whether the Ivernia will be detained on her way here, and thus upset the plans for the wedding and reception next Thursday.

BABY STARVES TO DEATH.

Pitiful Case of Deserted Infant in Brockton.

BROCKTON, July 23.—The youngest of the nine children of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Nixon Linwood street, died this afternoon of starvation. It was baby Ruth, four months old. C. C. Jones, agent of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, is making an investigation.

Mrs. Nixon disappeared suddenly last week. When her husband returned from his work he found his children crying. Since that time he has been heartbroken and unable to work.

Too proud to call for aid from the outside, he remained in the house, caring as well as he could for his offspring. Little Ruth fell sick, refusing to take nourishment. The baby cried continually for its mother.

Brockton Shoe Shipments.

BROCKTON, July 23.—Shoe shipments out of this city this week were unusually large, totalling 394,744 pairs. In all 404,744 pairs of shoes were shipped.

MRS. BURNETT TAKES A GLIMPSE INTO NEW WORLD

Great Change Coming In Regard to the Occult, Declares Famous Woman Author.

NEW YORK, July 23.—Do we possess a faculty of perception independent of the five senses which enables us to understand what is going on about us?

Is the mind at times under the influence of thought waves projected by another mind?

Can a constructive thought current be established between kindred minds resulting in mutual encouragement and help?

Can a powerful mind send out an idea which will create an irresistible wave, change the world of thought and influence millions for the good of the race?

Just Back from Europe.

These were some of the questions discussed by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett to-day. It was the author of the "Dawn of To-morrow" who discussed them, not the mother of Lord Fauntleroy.

Mrs. Burnett, vivacious and younger than ever, has just returned from a trip to England and is enamored at present in an Italian-like villa, overlooking Manhasset Bay, near Plandome, L. I.

"I have thought about these questions much in the last few years," she began. "And do you know I have turned many interesting conclusions—conclusions which a few years since would have been pooh-poohed into oblivion. I have rallied to many fundamental unknown here and abroad, and I find a great change coming over the world of thought in regard to the occult—the unknown.

"I believe that this twentieth century will be marked by as much mental progress toward the solving of what, for the lack of a better term, we must call the Unknown. Something of life, in the past five thousand years have been marked by such startling physical metamorphoses in man. In mental progress we are now rapidly emerging from the cul-de-sac stage.

Mysterious Aid in Work.

"There are many steps in this mental progress. "I have often called upon this Unknown Thing to help me in my work. It seems to sweep clean-cut and almost to dictate to me what to write. It came to me the first many years ago when I was writing "The Shuttle." For weeks and weeks I puzzled over a certain situation in that book. As the time approached when that situation had to be handled, I worried myself almost into a frenzy, and eventually to myself: You must not write it that way. What will people say if you do?

Then, one day like a flash, the proper way to treat the situation came to me and I wrote it in a manner that was like a child and some great genius were guiding my facile fingers. I have always been told that this was the most powerful thing I ever did.

"Since that experience I have done all my work that same mode. Some writers use. When this Thing tells me I have a book or play to write, I simply sit down and spin it out like a spider does his web.

Minds in Communication.

"I firmly believe that there is a constructive thought current established by certain minds. All of us have felt it in one form or another. You cannot enter a roomful of people without being affected by their attitude toward you in the room. And I have come to be able to tell almost a personality which you feel mentally is repellent to me. As a result of this belief I have tried to attract repellent personalities, and thank me I failed.

"Once I tried to win over a woman in Connecticut whose personality I felt was repellent to mine. I was in a position to help her, and I made up my mind to put in my debt in several instances and went out to the country to see her. The experiment ended in a most painful experience, and led me thereafter to let alone the persons who repel me and whom I repel.

"But there is the bright side of the picture. Just as surely as two personalities can repel each other at times. That is why I say that a constructive thought current can be established between two persons. Although we are unknown physically to each other, these two persons can be mentally in touch. I call it a sort of mental partnership, to the mutual advantage of both. All of us, unconsciously or consciously, have experienced this feeling.

"We meet a person for the first time. Yet we feel that we have known that person a lifetime. Why? Simply because we have been in mental communication with that person in some way that has led to encourage that person during some great crisis in their personal life.

Moving Target Demolished.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., July 23.—The First United States Artillery Corps to-day concluded at Fort Stark its most successful practice in harbor mine defense. To-day a target moving nine miles an hour was established and at about 2500 feet in th ole sir by the first mine exploded.

BISHOP WANTS MAN AS NEW PRESIDENT OF WELLESLEY

WOMEN DEMAND WOMAN

Conflict of Opinion Real Reason Why Miss Hazard Quit as College Head.

A MOVEMENT is on foot to bring about the selection of a man for president of Wellesley College. The majority of the men members of the board of trustees, who outnumber the women members, favor a man. Bishop Lawrence, vice-president of the board of trustees, favors a man.

The women on the board of trustees want a woman. The great throng of alumni of the famous college are marshalling their forces to fight the selection of a man to step into the shoes of Miss Caroline Hazard and thus break the traditions of the school.

The conflict of opinion as to whether a man should or should not head the school, it now may be said on the best authority, was the real reason why Miss Hazard decided finally to lay down the reins of the work which she carried on with such conspicuous success.

Illness, it is admitted, was a contributing cause of the resignation of Miss Hazard, but she had been planning to do so for a long time of the growing feeling, especially among the men connected with the college. In favor of a man as its head, and in order not to be in the way of a change, she stepped down and out.

No Immediate Change.

It is not believed that the contemplated change will be brought about for a year at least. In the meantime Dean Ellen Pitz Pendleton, M. A., with a corps of assistants, will run the college. This, it is said, is in accordance with the wishes of Miss Hazard.

The board of trustees of Wellesley is composed of twenty-one members. Sixteen of them are men and nine women. The men are not a unit in selecting a man, while the women are a unit against it. As it is expected that practically all of the distinguished women graduates will back up the women on the board, a warm conflict is anticipated.

The men contingent have already several candidates in view, but they are keeping their names secret. The women are outspoken in the belief that the time has come to retire women and many of them favor Dean Pendleton. The women that do not favor Miss Pendleton think that a younger woman is needed for the place.

The men argue that the college has grown to such an extent during the past two years that it requires the broad, keen business head of a man to conduct its affairs. The selection of a man, it is said, in the business of the institution, while the would be command would be the desire a woman who could come into closer touch with the student body.

Help Woman at Head.

Those who stick to the idea that a woman should continue at the head of Wellesley cite the fact that the prosperity that has come to the college came under the reign of a woman, and there is no good reason to believe that prosperity would not continue under the right woman head.

Trust funds to a large amount are now in the hands of the college and the most connected with it believe that the management of the financial end of the concern could be better handled by a man than a woman. The men propose, of course, that a man be found who is qualified to fill the head of a big women's college—who has had experience that distinguishes him as the right man for the job.

Miss Hazard was chosen as president of the college there was a debt of over $100,000 hanging over it. This debt has been almost wiped out. Miss Hazard is a woman of considerable wealth and this enabled her to render financial aid to the college.

During the past two years much of the burden of the presidency of the college fell upon other shoulders because of the illness of Miss Hazard. It was this incapacity for work, because of illness, that first started the movement in favor of a man to head the institution.

Miss Hazard never came out one way or the other on the subject. When she felt, about two years ago, that such a feeling had begun to form she promptly tendered her resignation in the hope of heading off the trees. She was willing to quit then and there.

Bishop Favors Man.

But the trustees could not very well accept the resignation because of the timing of service that she had done the college. Of late Miss Hazard became confined that there was nothing left for her but to quit.

Bishop Lawrence has been a prominent factor in the movement. He is regarded as one of the best business men among the clergy of the country. It is declared that he has said over and over again that it would be the best thing that could be done for the college to select a man to head it.

The Bishop called attention to Radcliffe College, whose affairs are considered by a man. He cited Smith College, which had at its head for many years the Rev. L. L. Clark Seelye, just resigned.

Alpheus H. Hardy, the treasurer of the college, wants to keep his position because of the fact that his duties have so greatly increased of late years. It is also the opinion that his duties would grow lighter if a man were to become president.

The alumnae maintain that the college has come to its present height of prosperity through the administration of women, and cite Alice Freeman Palmer as a case in point. Letters will be sent to the board of trustees from the influential alumnae asking that the college preserve its characteristics as being run and directed by women.

Dean Ellen Fitz Pendleton, M. A., assisted by Miss Olive Davis, B. S., have conducted the affairs of the college for some time and will continue to do so.

EDUCATOR WHO HAS JUST TAKEN HIS THIRD BRIDE

CHAS. H. MORSE

CHARLES H. MORSE MARRIED IN SECRET

Former Head of Rindge School Takes a Bride for a Third Time.

CHARLES W MORSE of Cambridge, former superintendent of the Rindge Manual Training School and secretary of the State Commission on Industrial Education, has just been married for the third time. The wedding has been kept secret from the public for ten days.

Mr. Morse, who is an electrical engineer, married Miss Kate C. Barnard, recently of Seattle, Wash., on July 14 in Lemgster, N. H. The late Rev. Ezra C. Morse, father of the bridegroom, was pastor of a Cambridge druggist, was in the town for years visiting both places and being in feeble health was taken that the ceremony should be performed before he died. Soon after the ceremony the couple motored away. Mr. and Mrs. Morse kept the news of their marriage from his Cambridge friends because of her bereavement.

Then the newly-wed couple motored to Cambridge from Lempster on Thursday last they went immediately to Mr. Morse's home at No. 328 Harvard street, Cambridge, where they will make their future abode. Mr. Morse is about fifty years old and his first marriage took place in Bingham about twenty-six years ago. After the death of his first wife he married again and about five years later was made a widower for the second time. His third Mrs. Morse is younger than her husband.

Many of the trustees are favorably inclined towards Miss Pendleton and think her the logical successor of Miss Hazard, that with the assistance of a dean, the new consider the work too much for the physical endurance of a woman to undertake, which involves so much care and business ability.

Acting Head Popular.

Miss Pendleton is very well liked at the college, and is popular with the townspeople. Since by all her life has been spent at the college where she was graduated to the eighties.

At one time she was the professor of mathematics and has served in different capacities before her appointment as dean. Personally she is a most attractive woman, and, in the opinion of many, would make an admirable president if she could endure the work. At present she has the direct cooperation of the board who are doing all in their power to aid her. Like Miss Hazard, she was born in Rhode Island. Her native town is Wavertree. She comes from a prominent family, and in early life showed much interest in education which has made her so popular among the students.

Miss Pendleton, however, has no aspirations to be president. She has been approached by many who are educator and admirers of the college, but has declared that the presidency of the college might be left to a man for a time, as there are many difficulties in the discipline of the students which might be more effectively carried on by a male president.

For some months it has been an open secret among the townspeople that the students of the college resented Miss Hazard's rule. Last year certain cases of insubordination came before the faculty, which were perplexing to them, and to save the good name of the college, nothing was done. It is now stated that a quiet president could handle these cases more effectively.

MORAN HOMESTEAD SOLD.

Birthplace of the Late County Prosecutor in Stranger's Hands.

WAKEFIELD, July 23.—The sale this week of the John Moran place, in Melvin street, to Louis Evangelists, brought back to Wakefield old times memories of the boyhood days of John B. Moran.

The house in Melvin street was the birthplace of the late District Attorney of Suffolk County. Here John B. was ushered well, always knew him, spent his boyhood and grew to manhood. From here he went to school, an original and quite an "aster" and aggressive in those days as he proved to be later as prosecutor and candidate for Governor.

Moran's father, too, has gone the way of all flesh and the little white house at the foot of the hill has passed to the hands of strangers.

RIOTS IN CANADA BEGIN IN GRAND TRUNK STRIKE; MILITIA IS CALLED OUT

MONTREAL, July 23.—With one town practically under military rule, with the police forces of a dozen others augmented to twice their ordinary size, and with an army of special detectives watching railway property from one end of the country to the other, the strike of the conductors and trainmen employed by the Grand Trunk railway has taken a more serious aspect to-day than at any time since it was declared a week ago.

The storming of the railway station and the attack on the strike-breakers and detectives at Brockville, Ont., last night, resulted in the calling out of the Forty-first Regiment of Canadian militia, which is now patrolling the streets and guarding the railway property at that point, twice the scene of rioting on the part of strike sympathizers.

In Montreal and in other towns the police protection has been doubled in anticipation of further violence.

Crowd Stone Yardmen.

Two yardmen were attacked and stoned while making up trains in Point St. Charles yard to-day and a strike-breaking conductor was set on fire and destroyed. From various points throughout the day reports of disturbances have come in. Both sides have flatly rejected overtures for arbitration and from now on it will be a finish fight.

There is grave fear that the engineers and firemen will become involved. They have agents here watching their interests and they have given notice that they will do nothing to defeat the strike.

President Lee of the trainmen's Union is expected to arrive here to-morrow from Cleveland to take charge of the strike for the men. President Hayes continues to give it his personal attention for the company. Both sides were very defiant this afternoon.

E. H. Fitzhugh, first vice-president of the Grand Trunk, speaking for the company, said: "The backbone of the strike is broken absolutely and without doubt. You can make that statement as emphatic as you like."

Two Problems in the State.

"In this strike we have had two problems to contend with. First, we had to draft off a lot of men from regular work in order to get the protection of the militia, and we have had to engage and train a lot of men to take the place of those who struck on our service. I am now in a position to state that the company has all the men needed to resume its full traffic service, both passenger and freight.

"All we want now is for the authorities to provide adequate protection for our property. The moment that is done such large numbers of men will be released from the duty of guardianship that we can start the wheels of traffic moving."

Vice-President Murdock of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen was just as positive that a victory was with the men.

"You can take from me that we are not looking for arbitration," he said to-day. "We don't care whether we arbitrate or not. We don't want it. We believe we can last out as long as the other men and then a bit longer. There's nothing to arbitrate. Our position is quite clear and definite."

Another member of the committee expressed the same view as to the strike-factory position. The Thomas Canadian that they had been more successful than they had hoped. When the report of the number of freight trains being moved was shown to him, he smiled.

"They can't bluff us," he remarked, "we know exactly what is being done as regards freight movement."

Shops Reopen To-morrow.

Following a conference of the leading officials of the company here to-day it was announced that the shops all over the system, which were shut down last Tuesday in consequence of the strike, will be re-opened Monday morning, restoring about six thousand operatives to employment.

Because of the sympathy expressed in Windsor, Vt., for the striking conductors and trainmen of the central Vermont branch of the Grand Trunk Railroad, strike-breakers are giving the place a wide berth. As each stop of the northbound passengers, the villagers congregate on the platforms and hoot and jeer the non-union train hands.

To prepare order in case of the arrival of strikebreakers the town authorities, at the request of the railroad officials, have sworn in ten special policemen, who are in charge of Deputy Sheriff J. Kirby Hall.

No freight is received at the Windsor depot. The town authorities have refused to have their goods delivered by way of the railroad, and are ordering their merchandise by other routes.

Vermont Ready for Trouble.

Governor Prouty, who is spending his vacation at Newport, Vt., in a statement issued to-day, says he intends to be ready for trouble in connection with the strike on the Central Vermont Division and will order the militia, if necessary, to preserve order.

"I will not take sides with either party in this controversy," said the Governor to-day. "My only connection with the difficulty will be in an official capacity to preserve the dignity of the State and safeguard its interests.

"The Lake Island Pond when I heard of trouble there and found a few loafers and men who wanted to create disorder. We succeeded in quieting them, and up to the present time there has been any complaint from that section."

The strike at the White River Junction, Vt., are keeping very orderly, according to reports received here. Most of the men are at the flats near White River meadow, playing ball every day. The residents of the town are in sympathy with them and are offering encouragement to keep on until all differences are settled to their satisfaction. Hotel proprietors, to show their feeling for the strikers, are refusing board and lodgings to strike-breakers.

HARVARD NOW HAS A REAL 'BUGHOUSE'

But Its Purpose Is Merely to Capture the Deadly Leopard Moths.

There's a "bug-house" over among the historic elms of the Harvard University yard in Cambridge, and its a real one, filled most of the time with real live bugs. The bugs are not on exhibition but rather in durance vile, as a punishment for being leopard moths, deadly to the welfare of those MOTH historic elms.

The reason for this trap is the deadly attack the moths have been making on the trees in the college yard. The damage has been so great that the yard has lost much of its beauty.

The trap or "bug-house" is a unique invention. It consists of a screened affair, with glass walls, suspended from the trees in front of University Hall. The bugs in the elms are arranged in pyramidal series, and about three inches from the bottom is a twelve inch opening. Within the trap is a powerful arc light, which attracts the moths, and they fly through the small opening and are unable to find their way out.

Two other traps have been installed, one in front of Sever Hall and the other between the class of '77 Gate and Gore Hall Library.

STRIKE CRISIS MONDAY.

Fear Trouble if Cloak Manufacturers Try to Start Up.

NEW YORK, July 23.—A crisis in the strike of the cloak makers, of whom 90,000 are out in this city and vicinity, is expected Monday, when employers will try to start several of the biggest establishments with non-union help.

The police reserves in the precincts in which the factories are located will be ordered to remain in the station houses all day Monday.

The manufacturers say they have all the help engaged that they can use and that the factories will open. The union leaders say that a few experienced workers are available and that the factories cannot open.

JUMP RAILROAD FARE.

Brockton Commuters Buy 20,000 Tickets at Old Price.

BROCKTON, July 23.—To-day the rates on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad were increased five cents out of Brockton, going up from forty to forty-five cents, to Boston. Commuters, however, who learned of the contemplated increase, made a run on the ticket offices. More than 20,000 tickets for trips to Boston were sold under the lower rate. Every ticket at hand was sold.

HALL ON PRISON SHIP.

Troublesome Naval Prisoner Must Serve Ten Years.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., July 23.—James E. Hall, the most troublesome convict in the United States Navy, was to-day transferred to the prison ship Hancock to serve sentences of ten years. He gained notoriety a year ago by his confession of the murder of Anna Schumacher at Rochester, N. Y.

Dies at His Work.

Frank Silver, age twenty-two, single, and living at No. 3 May place, employed in a building at No. 144 Tremont street, was found dead on the third floor there yesterday, from natural causes. His body was removed to the North Grove Street Morgue.

MISS DEACON WON'T APPEAL TO ROME

Bride-Elect's Grandmother Denies That Dispensation Will Be Sought.

NEWPORT, July 23.—Mrs. C. H. Baldwin, whose granddaughter, Miss Ruth Deacon of Boston, will marry George Lee Peabody of Boston about September 1, declared to-day that a dispensation had been asked from the Roman Catholic Church to permit Miss Deacon, a Catholic, to marry Mr. Peabody, a Unitarian, and a divorced man.

Miss Deacon will herself set the date of the wedding in a few days, says Mrs. Baldwin, and will probably select the middle of September.

It was supposed that a dispensation from Rome had been asked to enable Miss Deacon to be married by a Catholic priest, but Mrs. Baldwin's denial indicates that the bride's people have no hopes that a dispensation could be secured.

The wedding will take place at Snug Harbor, one of the show places of Newport. Miss Deacon arrived here with her party from Boston and, after visiting her grandparents, went to stay with the Pembroke Bonsons at Sherwood House.

BLISS, THE SHOE MAN, BOBS UP ON A VAHEY TICKET

New Factor Is Suddenly Injected Into the Coming Democratic Campaign.

THE advent of a new wand striking personality into the Democratic leaders's bet to talk about.

The name of Elmer J. Bliss, vice-president and managing director of the Regal Shoe Company, began to be discussed in connection with the nomination for Lieutenant-Governor.

The talk was of ofrmer Senator James H. Vahey to lead the Dixie Land hosts out of Mr. Bliss as his running mate.

Senator Vahey declined to talk about it. "Said all I have already said a dozen times," he declared last night in Watertown, "It is up to Democrats to say, as a party, whom they want on the ticket. I am not doing anything one way or another about it. I care agood deal more what the platform says this Fall than I do about whose name, or what names, are on the ticket."

Mr. Bliss is a Bit Modest.

Mr. Bliss, whose home is in Commonwealth avenue, Brighton, is spending the Sumer at Marblehead. He said there last night that he had authorized nobody to say for him that he is a candidate for Lieutenant-Governor.

"Many good friends—many very good friends—have been to me," Mr. Bliss said. "So tell me I ought to let them use my name in this connection. I have told them neither to go ahead nor to hold up. I do not want to conceal the pleasure it has given me to be seriously thought of in connection with so great an honor.

"I have never been in politics, but the longer I live the more I am convinced that the successful men in the United States must show a livelier interest in the affairs of State and nation. I do not think it would be wise or seemly for me to say more at this time. When I take any decided stand I want to hear from more of my fellow Democrats."

He's a Successful Man.

Mr. Bliss has been a wonderfully successful young business man. The company whose managing director he is is one of the phenomena of success of the shoe industry in the United States. It has at least three big factories, one at Whitman, a second in Milford and the third—for women's shoes—in Philadelphia.

The president of the company is L. C. Bliss, father of E. J. Bliss. President Bliss, who is well along in the sixties, is summering on Cape Cod. He was for forty-three years city treasurer.

The talk of Bliss for Lieutenant-Governor came yesterday for the most part from Democrats who believe that Senator Vahey is entitled to the nomination for Governor. These Democrats said that nothing could stop the nomination of Vahey and Bliss. They said further that, no matter what a handful of Democratic "leaders" might do or say, nothing could stop the election of Vahey and Bliss over Draper and Billings.

These Democrats went along to say further that Democratic Mayor Coughlin of Fall River, who is a power in Democratic matters, the Aimes fight on Lodge, the bold position of Draper and Billings's record for workmen, and laborers employed on public works, meant that almost any clean and wholesome Democratic ticket will win this Fall and win handily. That the high cost of living would help out, too, they said.

That Labor Vote, Again!

The same gentlemen remarked that the vote of Congressman Eugene N. Foss in the House of Representatives in voting against the pet bill of the American Federation of Labor, providing for some labor troubles in establishments in Massachusetts owned or controlled by Mr. Foss, had made the Congressman quite as distasteful to organized wage-earners as Mr. Bliss himself, if not more so.

Whereafter they said Democratic cheers go for the newly proposed ticket of Vahey and Bliss.

Mr. Bliss has come into the limelight of personal publicity only once before. He was prominent among the Massachusetts business men who marched to the State House two years ago to protest against letting the New Haven Railroad strike the granite of Maine. Mr. Bliss expressed the fear that this was letting down the bars to a great transportation monopoly. He thought Massachusetts would regret it.

The biographical books were found to contain only the most meagre facts about the Blisses—L. C. and E. J.—and newspaper reference departments added as light except as they indicated that the Blisses are charitable and generous to the last degree. At the time of the Ben Franciscs earthquake the papers were full of stories about E. J. Bliss's prompt action on behalf of the children of the stricken city.

Talked Of For Congress.

One prominent Democrat recalled last night that Mr. Bliss was one of the Democrats talked of for congress last Fall in the Fourteenth district. It was said that Mr. Bliss might have been the nominee if Foss had declined to run.

At the caucus of residents of Democratic it was said that Riley and Coughlin and Foss having declined to be candidates to take second place on the ticket with Foss, it was clear that the man upon whom who was willing to fill out the Vahey ticket.

Senator Vahey made no statements of any sort yesterday, beyond declaring that he cares much more about what the Democratic platform promises to do this Fall, than about the names on the ticket.

"It is time," he said, "for the Democratic party to flopping. We have got to take a position on the side of the people in this campaign and hold fast. I expect to be a delegate to the State convention. I hope to do one man's share at platform-building. At the present time nothing else is in my mind."

DISCOVER FLAW IN VOTING-MACHINE LAW

Resolve Will Not Go On the Ballot This Year Because of Error.

A flaw has been discovered in the voting-machine resolve passed by the two last Legislatures, and the voters will not be allowed to say next Fall whether or not they believe that voting machines should be used at the polls.

The Legislature neglected to order that the amendment be submitted to the voters by the Secretary of State and Attorney General Malone has ruled that the speaker cannot go on the ballot. Next year's Legislature can rectify the error, and the amendment can go on the ballot in the three elections of 1911.

The amendment strikes out from Chapter 1, Section 3, Article 3 of the Constitution of Massachusetts, the provision that "Every voter in the election of other representatives shall be chosen by WRITTEN or PRINTED ballot," and adds to the constitution to prohibit the use of voting machines in the election of other officers.

Voting-machines were given a try-out in the Fall of 1908. Former Representative Malcolm E. Nichols of Ward 19, then a candidate for the House, applied for an injunction to restrain the use of the machines in his district, pointing out the constitutional provision about "written votes." The Supreme Court upheld his contention. The filing of a resolve for a constitutional amendment to wipe out this provision followed. As is the case with every Constitutional amendment, the resolve must be passed by two successive Legislatures by a two-thirds vote in the House and a majority vote in the Senate. Ratification of the amendment by the voters is all that remains to make it effective.

WANT TRAINS BACK.

Quincy Citizens Name Committee to See New Haven Officials.

Quincy citizens are aroused by the new time table of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. They have held several mass meetings to register their protests and a committee will to-morrow call upon Vice-President F. D. Underwood in an effort to have the time schedule changed.

The committee has the backing of the Board of Trade, the Granite Manufacturers' Association and the Ward Four Improvement Association. Particular attention will be paid to the workmen's early morning train, which has been taken off.

The girl employes of the big river works at Wollaston are now forced to use the second car on the train.

Talk at Art Museum.

At the Dorcat service at the Museum of Fine Arts to-day, Vesper L. George will speak on "Design and Color" in the corridor of the Department of Western Art. J. Arthur MacLean will meet visitors in the Chinese Corridor and first and second Chinese Rooms from 2 to 5.

LODGE AND DRAPER 2D SURE TO WIN, SAYS HATFIELD

"All We Have to Do Is to Count Votes," Republican Chairman Declares.

NORTHAMPTON, July 23.—Senator Lodge has the senatorial situation so well in hand he might go to Europe, Governor Draper is as good as re-elected and practically all we have to do now is to count the votes," was the cheerful announcement made by Chairman Charles E. Hatfield of the Republican State Committee to an American reporter today.

But as an interesting sequel to this statement, Mr. Hatfield at the dinner at Hayden's Suffin college eating house of seventy-five Republican leaders from all over the State, announced that Republicans all throughout the Commonwealth were to be invited to the utmost if they wished to see the party successful at the polls this Fall.

Following the luncheon the diners were addressed by Allen Trenholm Cook-bridge, of the Senate; Lewis H. Warner of Washington, candidate for congressman; Joan W. Weeks and assistant secretary of the treasury, and Postmaster of Post offices; Charles E. Ware, member of the Seat Committee; H. F. Field, member of the State Executive Committee; Walter Mckenzie, secretary of the Hampden County committee, who presided, and Charles E. Hatfield, chairman of the Republican State Committee.

Hatfield Well Pleased.

Chairman Hatfield said that the conditions were for the Republicans to unite to find them at first, and when asked by the American correspondent how these conference such as the one held to-day, were operating in other parts of the country, he said:

"They are turning out to be excellent mediums for this purpose. There has been a great change during the past few weeks. much of the former criticism having disappeared. Everywhere I have been I find that since the closing days of Congress when Speaker Cannon and President Taft was securing enactment of measures which he opposed, that this morning I was talking to a prominent manufacturer, who said he had come out all right. There is a vastly different sentiment from what there was, and that they are looking forward hopefully to the future.

"We find that those being helped throughout the State by men who have deserted the critical attitude for the party. Fall, and are actively being aided by the presence in the State of Senator Lodge, Who know if I. E. A. Bliss, candidate for himself in his candidacy for re-election to the Senate, Article 3, Article 3 of the Constitution of Massachusetts, the provision that "Every voter in the election of other representatives shall be chosen by WRITTEN or PRINTED ballot," is nothing in the constitution to prohibit the use of voting machines in the election of other officers.

LODGE TO TALK AUGUST 16.

More Tariff Defence at Plymouth Republican Outing.

Henry Cabot Lodge will deliver his next interesting little talk about the tariff on Tuesday, August 16, at Nantasket Beach. The Senator yesterday accepted the invitation of the Plymouth County Republican Club to break bread with them on that date.

President Alexander Holmes of Kingston, Secretary Charles H. Ford of Plymouth, Wheatley of Abington, William L. Barnard and Henry F. Ripley of Hingham and Senator Roland B. Smith of Bridgewater brought word to Boston that folks who talk of the Democratic victory in the Seventh Congressional District this Fall evidently have been looking over the Old Colony Republicans have got together.

CURLEY AND DOYLE FRIENDS

Former Has Latter's Good Wishes in Fight for Congress.

Senator James H. Doyle and Alderman James M. Curley have come together and will have the support of Curley's followers in Ward 17 if he cares to run for re-election as alderman. Doyle gave Curley good wishes in his fight for Congress in the Fifth district, and Curley returned nothing stronger than good wishes. His home in Ward 17 is outside the lines of the Tenth district.

There is also another olive branch of opinion between Senator Doyle and Hon. James Donovan of Ward 8. Donovan is still very much a friend of anybody that is not a friend of Curley.

ODD FELLOWS FROLIC.

Cambridge Lodge Has Field Day at Riverside.

A picnic party of 250 Odd Fellows from the Cambridge Lodge, with wives and children, took possession of Riverside for recreation Grounds yesterday. There were divers games and dancing was enjoyed.

During the afternoon children's races were held. The forty-yard dash for girls between the ages of ten and fourteen was won by Florence Lapointe, while Ethel Rogers took the forty-yard dash for girls between sixteen and eighteen. Ernest Hoelsher won the fat men's race, younger boys and Charles Howes won the older boys' contest. Games were played by the team composed of McIntyre, Carter, Luff and Mugridge.

PETERS HEARS CHARGES.

Essex District Attorney to Probe Perncroft Inn's Licensing.

MIDDLETON, July 23.—The Honorable Commissioner of Corporations, on automobile roadhouses, has been called to the attention of District Attorney W. Scott Peters by Selectman H. Erskine Howe.

Selectman Howe, at a special vote on the license, the board of selectmen were two to one to license the inn, is quite puzzled. There was meeting after meeting of the board before the Perncroft got the license.

Finally, backed by a petition of the influential men of Middleton, the inn got its license, the fee being reduced from $2,750 to $2,000.

Selectman Howe and W. F. Early, representing the no-license sentiment of the village, have asked the district-attorney to please look into it.

INFANTRY FULL OF POLITICS, GOES INTO CAMP

Former Mayor Brown of Lowell, Now a Private, Opens Headquarters in a Tent.

THE town folk of South Framingham had to welcome the country and at the same time spend the parting guest, yesterday, when the gathered on the Common and along Concord street, to wave farewells to the Second Infantry, M. V. M., and to herald with cheers the arrival of twelve companies of the Sixth Infantry While the Second was marching to the railroad station, the companies of the Sixth were filing past on their way to the camping grounds.

The camp this week will be something out of the usual, owing to the presence of Company K, of Lowell. Things political will be brewing in Company K quarters, for among the boys in khaki is ex-Mayor George H. Brown, who was recently ousted into the chair of Mayor of Lowell. Mr. Brown became a member of the Company Friday night.

The Kid Glove Regiment.

Company K is known as the "kid glove" company of the regiment. There are city officials, bankers and some of the best known citizens of Lowell in the ranks.

A striking figure in the Lowell aggregation is Private Geronimo Hubsig, a native Italian and graduate of the Lowell High School.

Happenings in the ex-Mayor's tent, however, will be of the most interest to outsiders. Mr. Mackay is to receive a part of the tent in which the politics campaign will be waged in Lowell this Fall in behalf of Mr. Brown as the candidate out. It is to talk a Boston Sunday American reporter caught a snap-shot, entitled to one of the Western State companies in the act of lighting a fire in a stove.

The non-com. was placed in the guard-house. It is likely he will be severely disciplined. It is declared that he is guilty of all the bomb throwing.

Adjutant William H. Dolan of Fitchburg counts 764 men and officers present out of a total enlisted strength of 1,000. This includes the roster of the band of 36 pieces.

CITY ARRANGES FOR 88 FREE CONCERTS

While the regularly organized municipal band of the city of Boston is a victim of the differences that arose between the city music department and the Musicians' Union, Boston will not have to go without Summer music, for eighty concerts have been arranged.

The union wanted $2 a man for rehearsals, maintaining that the musicians were not members of a regularly organized band. To grant their request would have meant twenty-two less concerts.

The reason for former Secretary Dean's visit at this time is:

1908, Draper 5,816; Vahey 4,512; Draper's plurality, 1,104. 1900, Vahey 4,955, Draper 4,674; Vahey's plurality 279.

PREVENTIVE CLINIC URGED FOR BIG FACTORIES

Boston Chamber of Commerce's Recent Action Regarded as Great Move.

ONE of the most important moves ever made in this city was the effort of the Boston Chamber of Commerce to prevent the spread of disease in industrial and business plants. It appointed a committee to investigate and report what should be taken to eliminate the danger of sickness and accident where men and women work for a living, and this committee, of which Dr. Richard C. Cabot is chairman, has presented a report which means much to the welfare of employers and employees alike.

The report states that the district inspectors of the State Board of Health have no time to undertake educational work and that the best way to proceed is through the individual. It is suggested that employes of factory or store have the best medical and surgical service possible, and that it is the duty of employers to see that they get it.

Information a Secret.

But the employer should not have any knowledge of information given by employes to a physician, and the employer should be the one to hire the doctor. A store nurse should have authority to call a girl to her office and recommend that the amount of physician, and while she should respect the confidence of the girl she should, if necessary, report a case to the manager. Rest rooms should also, for the protection of the whole store, have the authority, with the signature of a store physician, to call for the resignation of employes.

The report recommends that the form of organization for a business establishment should be a surgeon and physician, a set of staff assistants, women physicians and specialists in the nose and throat, and teeth and eyes. The report states that the commonest conditions which such properly qualified men able to help are colds, anemia, bad habits in eating, bad teeth, coffee, alcohol and tobacco, neglected teeth, poor throat and certain skin diseases.

Committee's Recommendations.

The recommendations made by the committee are as follows:

"It is proposed, therefore, that the Chamber of Commerce, through its Committee on Prevention of Disease and Accidents, shall declare itself prepared to help with to provide any firm in its membership with a plan for the minimum number of people with a Preventive Clinic. Such a committee would be glad to plan somewhat as follows:

"1. The regular attendance of a doctor at the store or factory for one or more hours daily, the doctor to be chosen or selected by the Committee on Prevention of Disease and Accidents.

"2. The service of these doctors shall consist in giving personal instruction in the right ways of living, through talks to individuals or groups of them, by themselves below par in health, are not sick enough to require the function of these doctors shall be not to interfere with the work of the family physician, except with the individual, but shall be almost wholly preventive in character.

"3. The services of these doctors shall be strictly up to the highest ethical standards of the Massachusetts Medical Society and the doctors shall receive no payment nay either from the firm or the employes.

"4. Relations of the doctors to the individuals to be given personal instruction shall be strictly confidential.

"5. The Old Colony Trust Company regarding hygienic conditions of the building, working conditions, etc.

"6. Wherever it can be arranged, at least in the case of employes under forty-five, it is advised that a nurse be employed who shall supervise the work. Such service shall be largely that of prevention and shall also serve the purpose of a pass for itself in the prevention of damage suits and as an advertisement."

WANTS CITY TO PAY.

Dorchester Asked to Appropriate $500 for Forestry Work.

BROCKTON, July 23.—Because he thinks this city should pay for its own forestry work and not the citizens individually, City Forester Edward Norton informed mayor elect Ellis before the Brockton Board of Trade to-night to request an appropriation of $500. The official says he does not intend to continue the work of the department.

We have been doing the work of the city with money provided by private citizens," said Mr. Mottou, to-day. "The Governor's report of this work. The citizens bette which he now raising havoc with our trees requires a lot of attention. The bettes are eating up the trees. We need more money."

BOY STILL LINGERS IN OPIUM'S GRASP

Seven of Children Who Ate Drug They Found Have Fully Recovered.

WEBSTER, July 23.—Joseph Pepka, aged six years, is the only one of the eight children who feasted upon opium pills whose condition is still serious. He has not regained consciousness for over twenty-four hours. It is thought, however, that the physicians will save his life.

The eight children found the bottle of forty one-grain opium pills on a public dump near Elm street. They hailed the sugar-coated pellets as candy and all immediately went to a tent in the yard of the Pepka house and proceeded to amuse themselves by passing the bottle around as if they were passing a plate of cake at a reception.

The children didn't like the pellets very well when they chewed them and they did not eat many. Little Joseph, however, ate about ten of them before he was satisfied.

The parents of the children became frightened when the children began going asleep early in the afternoon and physicians were summoned. They succeeded in bringing all of the children except Joseph out of danger. And they hope for his recovery.

HETTY GREEN HUGS AND CARESSES SON

NEW YORK, July 23.—The purely richest woman in the world and usually considered more or less heartless was revealed to-day.

Her son, Colonel Edward H. R. Green, received hours of attention from his mother's request that he take some of her business cares off her shoulders. While he was driving with the mayor, they became a think knock at the door. The colonel walked over and opened it.

An aged lady dressed entirely in black fell into the boy's arms. Before he could in, throw herself into her big son's arms and kissed him fervently. Her hands kissed him again and again.

The visitor, who was an arm chair, she sat on the side of it and began to "mother" the boy. Colonel Green and Mrs. Green will turn most of her business affairs over to him.

WARREN REPLIES TO ATTACK ON CIVIL SERVICE BOARD

Declares Magenis in Open Letter Sought to Give Public Wrong Impression.

CHARLES WARREN, chairman of the Civil Service Commission, to-day replies to the attack on the Civil Service Commission made in an open letter to the Boston press by James P. Magenis, of the Board of Education Committee.

Mr. Warren takes up only those charges which deal with the Commissioner's examination for an Italian transit officer. His reply to Magenis is addressed to John A. Gillis, chairman of the Boston School Committee and follows, in part:

David A. Gillis, Esq.,

Chairman Boston School Committee.

My Dear Sir—In last Sunday's newspapers there appeared a letter from Mr. James P. Magenis, a member of your board, in which, mingled with an alleged personal grievance, he sought to give the impression to the public that the Civil Service Commission was opposed to the effort of the Boston School Committee to appoint a competent Italian-speaking transit officer.

Wished to Co-operate.

As you well know, the Civil Service Commission has always wished to cooperate with your board in obtaining competent officials. It has been particularly interested in the matter of the appointment of such needed official from Italian speaking candidates, and has favored it on every proper occasion.

Last autumn the commission received a requisition from your board for a transit officer having a speaking knowledge of Italian. There were four persons on the list who claimed to have such knowledge, and the three highest of these four were certified to your board, the test in Italian being left to your board to make. You later notified the commission that, in your opinion these three men were not competent in knowledge of Italian.

Only one man was left on the list, Mr. Forte, but as he had obtained a very low percentage on the general examination, viz., 66.79 per cent, the commission decided that an effort should be made to secure a full eligible list. Accordingly it constitutionally voted to hold a new examination, at which Mr. Forte was free to try with a view to impress the School Committee, but with the distinct understanding that he and Boston the widest opportunity to apply for this position. In the meantime, pending the new examination, the commission authorized the appointment of Mr. Forte provisional appointment, and Mr. Forte was appointed.

On the new examination four Italians passed, Messrs. Clampa, 82.49; Clampa, 81.35, and Forte, 79.63, in the order named.

Charges Not Sustained.

Charges were filed on behalf of Mr. Forte attacking Mr. Abeta and Mr. Clampa on the grounds of favoritism and personal acquaintance of one and residence. After several hearings these charges were not sustained by the commission, but Mr. Forte withdrew his own name.

Accordingly, the fourth name, that of Mr. Forte, became third. The commission was then forced to act upon the request of Mr. Forte, and your board then had before it three names, Clampa, Clampa and Forte. No appointment, I understand, was made, and Mr. Forte proceeded to attack the commission.

In conclusion I again assure you that so far as possible under the law, the commission will endeavor to cooperate with appointing officials.

Very respectfully yours,

CHARLES WARREN, Chairman.

SELLS HIS LIFE FOR KISS.

Notorious Bandit Pays Death Penalty to See Sweetheart.

VALENCE, France, July 23.—Jean Lasarque, the most notorious bandit in the history of modern France, the leader of the gang which terrorized the country side of the Drome, the man without mercy, sold his head for a kiss.

To-day he stood impassively as the magistrate sentenced him for the second time to death. Then he was taken to his penalty, he told the Judges, for he had seen his sweetheart in the crowd and was sure that a man who seemed to have been with her would not dare bring to die for a woman's love. The girl went silently as she heard her sweetheart doomed.

Lamarque knew the danger he faced before he came back to France. He is listed in the roll of love, but it is to the "red widow" that he owes his life.

EAT POPCORN AND GET AHEAD OF ALL THE FOOD TRUSTS

LIVE ON 30 CENTS A DAY

Physician Says You'll Be a Young Samson and Peace Will Prevail.

Pop corn, an egg and milk.
This is all the food we need, according to Dr. Charles E. Buck, Boston specialist in foods.
This is the food that will give energy, happiness and peace to all, both young and old.
Eat it always.
Eat it as often during the day as you care to.
It will cost thirty cents a day to get all the food you need.
His recipe is this: One raw egg with a tablespoonful of sugar beaten into a half bowl of milk filled with fresh popcorn.
Get a good sized popper and pop your own corn.
It will cure the army of dyspeptics.

DR. CHARLES E. BUCK of No. 195 West Brookline street, has for years been studying the matter of food supply. The high price of meat he regards as opportune as it will awaken people to the consideration of food which is cheaper and more nutritious.

After examining many food stuffs he has come to the conclusion that there is nothing so essential in preserving the health of the individual as popcorn with milk and egg.

This he has tried for weeks himself and to-day is much stronger and better every way than he was one year ago. He has touched nothing for weeks but this kind of food and has recommended it to others who have cured themselves of indigestion.

Forget the Meat.

Dr. Buck is a recognized authority. For several years he was in charge of the food department of the Floating Hospital.

"Pop corn with milk and egg is all the food that people need," said Dr. Buck. "We must do all we can to get over the idea that we need meat and a lot of material to go with it. One raw egg, a tablespoonful of sugar beaten in one-half bowl of milk filled with fresh popcorn is the food that will give energy, happiness and peace of mind.

"We should take a more active interest in our diet, and the properties of the food which we should eat should be more generally known. We like to know everything else, but when it comes to food, how few know anything about it. We need to think that popcorn was something to eat before the fourth upon a Winter's evening, but let me tell you that it will come to the front as food because of the energy that may be obtained from it. Of course the particular diet that I have referred to must be masticated properly. If you cannot chew the corn, put it into any grinding machine.

"Above all get a good popper. Be as particular in this respect as you are in getting the proper vessels for cooking other kinds of food. Put into your popper a little butter and then some milk if you do not care to follow the exact recipe given before. Take this food when you get up in the morning with your coffee. If you feel inclined take some more of it. Eat it often. Keep the popper around and ready for service. Eat slowly. If you have no popper, take your shaking dish and instead of making welsh rarebit therein utilize it as a popper.

Cheap and Easy to Digest.

"The new diet is easily digested. It is nutritious food. It is cheap food. How many in this very city are victims of dyspepsia? They are rushing to a drug store after every meal and taking a soda mint or pepsin or some other preparation. They need a change of diet and they need a simple one.

"Did you ever stop to reason how a horse pulls heavy burdens and eats nothing but oats and hay? Are our digestive organs so different? Why do we have so many diseases if not that they may be traced to what we eat and make ourselves believe that we need them.

"Eat corn and you will live upon thirty cents a day in this style. The way to cut down expenses is to change your diet. Study foods. Study the properties of food. Don't imagine a good steak, juicy and well cooked, is going to give you energy. Meat eating is merely a habit. Then it is worse by some that they need variety in their food. But this is merely for the eye. You must feed your body as you feed your furnace.

"The whole question is simply this: We need food that makes energy. Combine popcorn with milk and eggs and you have it. You want simple food. You want food that will digest with proper mastication. You do not want that which calls for a powder to make it its easily upon your stomach. We are getting nothing to be a dyspeptic race. We boil our food and then the food we boil is enough to cause every disease imaginable. You see persons going 'ding and taking all sorts of powders with it. Why, all they need is a bag of corn and some eggs and milk."

About ten days ago Grosser moved to No. 204 A street, taking with him, Murphy alleged, furniture which belonged to the house on Silver street. The complainant failed to appear in court.

REVERE MERMAID IS OUT WITH CHALLENGE

Annie Morecroft Ready to Defend Her Claim as Champion Girl Swimmer.

Miss Annie Morecroft of Revere, who has succeeded in swimming from Nahant to Revere Beach on two occasions, is now out with a challenge to any woman swimmer for any distance in Boston waters.

The little Revere girl, who is only fifteen years old, has succeeded in crossing the dangerous Lynn channel from Nahant to Revere Beach and now holds the record for the distance, despite the fact that Annette Kellerman has covered it. She swam faster all the way than the famous Kellerman.

Miss Elsie Ackroyd covered the distance from Revere Beach to Nahant and return, but she did not do the distance in the time covered by the Revere swimmer. Miss Ackroyd is to defend the title of the United States against England on the Thames River, but friends of Miss Morecroft say she is the rightful representative of this country in the International race.

Miss Morecroft is a natural swimmer and has never been taught any of the strokes used in her distance swims. The little mermaid will soon attempt to duplicate the feat of Miss Ackroyd, after which she will attempt the Hull Gut difficulty, and then will try to reach Boston Light, the first that has yet to be accomplished.

Miss Morecroft is not boastful of her ability, but feels that she is able to defeat any of the girl swimmers in and around Boston. She is the first girl to appear as a distance champion from Revere and has the support of the swimmers along the North Shore, who are confident she is the champion.

Miss Morecroft started her natatorial stunts in Chelsea Creek in the rear of her home and later joined the bathers at Revere Beach. Bathers along the shore saw the ability of the little girl. On her first attempt she swam from Revere to Nahant in record time.

If anybody disputes the claim of Miss Morecroft, arrangements for a match can be made by communicating with her at No. 22 Green street, Revere.

The distance of Miss Morecroft's swim from Nahant to Revere Beach is about four and one-half miles, which she accomplished on her first attempt in two hours and fifteen minutes, but she did it in two hours and five minutes on her second trip, which gives her the record.

FRANCONIA IS LAUNCHED.

Giant Cunarder to Ply Between Boston and Liverpool.

The Franconia is to be commissioned for the Boston and Liverpool service by the Cunard system. Especial care was taken that she should meet the every requirements of Boston traffic to speed up her record trip from New York to Mediterranean ports, starting March 11, 1911. For efficiency tested out she will be in her return placed on a regular schedule between the Hub and this city.

LIKES LIGHTING REPORT.

Mayor, However, Excepts to Use of Automatic Devices.

After reading the Finance Commission's report upon street lighting, Mayor Fitzgerald said yesterday that he believed all the recommendations were worthy of serious consideration, except that for the installation of automatic devices for lighting and extinguishing the gas lamps, which would mean the discharge of about 125 men and would create a very unpleasant situation. He also declared that by personal investigation he had learned that none of the automatic devices were successful. A delegation from the Laundrymen's Union visited the Mayor's office to protest against doing away with the services of the lighters.

O'MEARA'S CRIME CARNIVAL ON COMMON A BLOT TO CITY'S NAME

DRAPER ASKED TO REMOVE O'MEARA

conditions on the Common burst forth with the fierceness of a prairie fire. The flame of anger flashed through the big office building.

How the Meeting Was Called.

One of those who was particularly aroused was Mme. Cairns, a milliner with a large force of girls employed on the fifth floor. Just across the aisle from her, Miss Charlotte E. Marshall, a manufacturer of skirt waists. The two women talked over the situation at 10 o'clock yesterday forenoon.

"We women should take action in this matter and at once," declared Mme. Cairns.

"Let us call a mass meeting for today," promptly seconded Miss Marshall.

The work of getting up that mass meeting began at once. By noon all of the other business women who could be reached had been notified to meet at the rooms of Miss Marshall at 1 o'clock. By that time the milliner's working rooms had been turned into a hall, with chairs in the places of work benches, models and boxes of finery.

When 1 o'clock arrived there were nearly 100 women in those rooms and they had blood in their eyes. Miss Marshall was asked to act as chairman, which she did in a graceful way but when the meeting got to running she was almost powerless when she attempted to control it.

Tales of Insult Told.

Before a program of procedure had been worked out half of the women present had made speeches in which they denounced the conditions on the Common. Many of the women jumped upon chairs so that they could better be seen and heard. More than a score of stories flashed from the tongues of the indignant women of how they had been insulted while passing through the Common.

"Something should be done to clean up Boston Common," one woman declared.

"Whatever we do," suggested Mme. Cairns, "should be done at once. We should strike while the iron is hot. Boston is thoroughly aroused as I have never seen it before over the odious conditions in the Common. The agitation is in the air and I for one do not believe that it will die out until something is accomplished."

"This is no question of sentiment. It is a question of business, of health and of decency. Our working girls have good quarters during the noon hour to eat, but they should have some decent place where they can go when they are through work to get fresh air. The Boston Common, as it always has been, was never meant to be of benefit to just such purposes.

"But there are thousands of women in Boston who can tell you from their own personal experiences the impossibility of walking through the Common without result from the horde of hoodlums who have found it an asylum beyond the pale of the police."

If Not O'Meara, Then—

"If Police Commissioner O'Meara can't improve conditions on the Common I want to know, and the business women of Boston want to know who can. We demand that something be done, and if something is not done the head of Boston's police force will receive the surprise of his life."

Miss Marshall, in the course of her address, followed in the same line as Mme. Cairns.

"When Mr. O'Meara declares that he hasn't enough policemen," she said, "I'll take care properly of conditions on the Common, it is time that this big city of New England got more policemen. We certainly have enough money to hire adequate protection for ourselves, and for short we may be in money for other things.

"Self-protection is the first law of nature, and we women of Boston who may be in a position to take care of ourselves owe it to our sisters who are daily at the mercy of the criminals and thugs who infest the Common to make our position known in this matter in no uncertain way."

One of the other women present, climbing upon a chair, made the statement:

"I want to tell you women who are gathered here this afternoon and I want Police Commissioner O'Meara and the whole city of Boston to know, that I myself have worked in the Phillips building in Tremont street, and for ten years I was obliged to pass through the Common to get to my home on Beacon Hill.

Insulted Every Evening.

"During that ten years I do not believe hardly a single evening passed that some brute did not approach me as I hurried to my home with words that made by blood tingle with shame. This story can be duplicated by hundreds in Boston. Police Commissioner O'Meara made the faintest attempt to answer the charges in my statement he certainly would recede from the position which he has taken in this matter."

Resolutions were then drawn up and handed about the room for signatures. By Monday it is expected that these resolutions will have several hundred names attached to them, and then they may be presented to Governor Draper. Following are the resolutions with some of the names attached:

Whereas: We the members of the Woman's Board of Trade representing some of the largest and best interests of this city, employing hundreds of women and girls, who are closely confined all day in shops and factories, whose only time for recreation and fresh air is during the noon hour.

Therefore, We demand better protection for all self-respecting women on the Boston Common, Public Parks and streets of Boston.

Resolved, That if Police Commissioner O'Meara cannot or will not enforce the laws and the statute books, be we demand that Governor Draper remove Commissioner O'Meara, and appoint a man who will protect the property of the people, like unto the Boston Common, who will take care of itself.

Signed,

Meeting Monday Afternoon.

Mrs. Charlotte Smith, president of the Women's Homestead Association, which now has membership of about 200, has also attended the Women's Board of Trade meeting, and said:

"We propose to hold a meeting on Monday afternoon and we will take vigorous action regarding the Boston Common situation. I have never known deeper and more united feeling expressed on any one matter in Boston by the people than about the deplorable conditions on the Common. If O'Meara will not do anything we will go to the governor, and if the governor refuses to do anything he will certainly hear from the people.

Boston and New York Compared.

Among the letters received by Mayor Fitzgerald about conditions on the Common was the following from a young woman who declares that New York conditions are far superior to those of Boston with reference to the protection of women. This is the letter:

I am a young business woman residently from Boston from New York. Not long ago I had an afternoon while I found I could not get a decent meal around town.

After visiting some of the centrally located historic spots I decided to spend the remainder of my time on the Common to rest and get a breath of fresh air. I had scarcely been there fifteen minutes when I was accosted by a man, a perfectly strange to me, another spot only to have the same experience repeated.

I then went to the Public Garden and finde-wit with the same treatment by five different men. All this time I had a book with me and was trying to read. Finally I was obliged to leave in disgust and go home. I appreciate near Channing statine, the inscription on which I read, but the spirit was followed away out there by a young man.

I had no chance to examine the statue because of the noise. Washington avenue car that came along. I was so vexed at being driven out of the park by loafers that I could have turned right then and there to the police had I not been afraid of getting my name into the police court records, of the morning papers.

Until six weeks ago I have lived all my life in New York and never had any such experience as this there, that this be done, and if something is not done the head of Boston's police force will receive the surprise of his life.

Miss Marshall, in the course of her address, followed in the same line as Mme. Cairns.

"When Mr. O'Meara declares that he hasn't enough policemen," she said, "I'll take care properly of conditions on the Common, it is time that this big city of New England got more policemen. We certainly have enough money to hire adequate protection for ourselves, and for short we may be in money for other things.

NO POLICE TO SAVE GIRLS ON COMMON

By SARA A. CONBOY

Written expressly for the Boston Sunday American.

A T the solicitation of the Boston Sunday American I spent several hours on the Boston Common and Public Garden on Thursday evening and night, and I thank God that I went there. I feel absolutely certain that I and my escort were the means of saving two girls who were wrecked in the toils of that peculiar human fiend who lays in wait for the young and helpless girl, ready to blast her life without a moment's hesitation or compassion.

While I saw many things in this famous breathing spot in the center of the city that made my blood run chill, yet ever since the one thing that has stood out in my mind and has caused me to shiver and flutter with fear when I thought of it, was the awful peril of the two "little babies in the woods" who were at the mercy of the human wolf.

Perhaps I could do no better than to relate the circumstances about the girls at the start. I may say that when I was requested to make the trip to the Common I was assured that I would be accompanied by a young man who would be ready to assist me in any emergency that might arise. I thought up the time that nothing was likely to happen to call for me the help of a stalwart, strong-limbed escort such as accompanied me. Later I learned he was with me, but let me tell you about it.

Two Girls in Distress.

We had reached the vicinity of the Boylston street entrance to the subway when we noticed two young girls. We could hear them talking to a man and it was the old story that is familiar to so many in this country the story that the girls had lost their purse and had not carfare home was without doubt true. The girls were talking to a man who was all sympathy, but it needed only a glance of the latitude to see that he looked upon the helpless couple as a chance to be there. The thought has come to me again and again—suppose that such a thing had happened to the daughter of Commissioner O'Meara?

Just One Incident of Many.

The commissioner would not have thought of the reckalcitrics of the law. No, he would not have stopped at calling upon the entire police force to clear the Common of such snakes—he would have called out the militia if such a thing had been deemed necessary.

This is just one incident of the evening. How many more such incidents happen in a year when there is no one nearby to prevent the contemplated crime will only be told through trailing tears in the future.

For there were other little girls in the Common ranging from twelve to fifteen years of age, and heart bleeds for their future. I feel that if Commissioner O'Meara had been with me on the night I walked about in the Common he would change his mind about things, and especially about his powerful force in the great Boston police force.

I was shocking to hear the talk of these loafers—the remarks that they made to the girls. But I cannot bear to repeat it. It would not be fit to print what I overheard.

The conditions on the Common could not be worse unless the law of decency were thrown to the winds. Of one thing I became fully convinced, and that is that the central park of Boston is no place for an unescorted woman, and that the park is certain parts of it, especially about the Soldiers' Monument and the Park entrance, even a man escort is not sufficient to protect one from insult.

None Free from Insult.

On several different occasions while I walked quietly about in that neighborhood I heard improper remarks hurled at apparently respectable young couples who had sought the benches for the purpose of having a little talk to themselves undisturbed. I noticed one particular gang of young men who were veritable devils. There were seven of them. They seemed to have gone to the Common for the purpose of devising ways and means of inflicting mental torture upon the unprotected. I was shocking to hear the talk of these loafers—the remarks that they made to the girls. But I cannot bear to repeat it. It would not be fit to print what I overheard.

It looked as though it were the intention of the gang trying to drive from the park all the respectable people so that it might be given up to hoodlumdom unmolested.

In what I have said I do not want any one to get the idea that I am writing a word against a man or woman because he or she is poorly dressed or unfortunate. I would be the last woman in the world to add to the misery of any such. I know too much about the suffering of the poor and the unfortunate in this world and I would rather that my right hand would drop in a paley than add one additional pain to their hearts.

Poor men, ragged men, unemployed men, seeking women—for work, not for evil words of compassion. These are not the people who make the Boston Common dangerous; this class of persons have regard for the law and for decency, and they should be open to them and it should be kept in such a condition that they would be free to enjoy it without rude molestation.

No Censure for the "Spoons."

Neither have I word of criticism against the numerous lover-like couples that I saw. It is natural for young people to fall in love, and it is natural for them to seek a park in which to walk and to build their castles that are the inheritance of youth and romance. They do not annoy any one—indeed, they are unconscious of the world around them, so much are they wrapped up in each other.

No, I have no word of censure for these honest, loving, young couples, and even if I should happen to be compelled to make a stolen kiss or two that would not be enough to make me cry "Police" unless I were fully assured that my voice would not reach a blue coated officer.

Yes, I would not disturb the unfortunate in the Common in the poor old down-and-out, dreaming away those bright visions of young manhood when he aimed to conquer the world. There is the nonpolitician, who fancies he holds the solution of all problems of state in the hollow of his hand and would join impress all within the reach of his strident voice with a sense of his profundity. There, too, is the wayward mother from the blistering tenement house district with just little hound clinging to her worn skirts. All are to be pitied.

I could not bring myself to feel utterly against the "panhandler" who solicited help. I had literally run into him in the doorway entrance when I met this frequenter of the Common.

Paradise for "Panhandlers."

It was a game and I knew it—but it was only the game of begging. But there was no element of vulgarity. He was well bear this verbal attack when I took other things into consideration. It is true that I was told that the Park street mail is the headquarters for this kind of thing. Scores have been annoyed and pestered by the beggars who are said in some instances to make from $3 to $4 a day.

I was surprised to find so many of the young uniformed members of Uncle Sam's Navy in the Common, and I did not like their conduct at all. It was apparent what they were there for, and if what I saw these young men do is not sufficient to call for the attention of the police, then the police are a needless expense to the city.

I cannot bring myself to discuss the unfortunate incidents of the city who frequent the Common. I pity them. God only knows how they came where they are, but may be that some of them were started but as the result of a mere boyish prank. I was startled when I found them at the beginning of the evening.

During two hours in the Common and Public Garden I cannot say that I saw only one member of the police force. Police headquarters should not have stopped at calling for the criminal class was well represented—for there were other little girls in the Common ranging from twelve to fifteen years of age, and my heart bleeds for their future. MAYOR ASKS CITIZENS TO JOIN IN PROTEST

By MAYOR JOHN F. FITZGERALD.

MAYOR FITZGERALD

I deny that it is impossible to improve conditions on the Common. There are three police stations, Nos. 2, 1 and 5, within a stone's throw of it, an dthe assignment of only two officers looks like a deliberate endeavor to furnish the minimum of protection to those who have to use this spot.

The fact that no increase in the number of officers is made in the evening, when conditions are admittedly aggravated, seems to indicate that the police department has thrown up its hands in helplessness and is willing to accept as an accomplished fact the transformation of Boston Common into a Great White Way.

How does that sound? How will it look in the newspapers of the cities in which Boston Common is regarded as sacred, historic ground. Shall we spread broadcast the impression that the tramp and the insulter of women are protected on Boston Common, while ladies without escort are merely invited to keep away?

If I had my way it is these degraded specimens of humanity, who would be provided with escorts and walked to a cell in the nearest station house.

The people have a right to demand that the whole aspect of the Common, moral as well as physical, shall be improved. The rich have their Fenway drives, their auto trips to the Blue Hills and all the suburban reservations, but here is a park for the poor. The West, North and South Ends adjoin it, and on warm Sundays and holidays the people pour out over the walks and lawns. Why should they be expected to tolerate sights and sounds which would not be permitted if the territory were resorted to by people of means and influence?

I am glad to see that such people are coming forward to add their voices to the general protest. The practically unanimous appeals of the daily press show that sentiment on this question is not confined to any class or section, and that the agitation is something more than a sensation of the hour, hatched for notoriety or political effect.

I am sure that it will bear fruit in an increase of vigilance on the part of the police and trust that every interested citizen will add his mite of strength to the cause.

The Boston Common Society, which is much exercised over the earshaped advertising signs in the subway station, might take note of what seems to us a much more serious desecration.

O'MEARA SAYS HE CAN'T IMPROVE THE CONDITIONS

The moral tone of the Common cannot be elevated, and there are certain phases of it that without new laws preventing one person speaking to another we cannot change. If a woman finds it unbearable she must be cautious enough to pick the spots well lighted, where the objectionable points will be eliminated.—Police Commissioner O'Meara.

SEE HOW O'MEARA KEEPS FORCE BUSY

Commissioner O'Meara calls some of the grave crimes that are committed on Boston Common too trivial to demand the attention of members of the police force. But in other sections of the city the blue-coated officers are busy making arrests for violations immeasurably of less importance, as a glance at the records of the municipal courts yesterday disclosed.

In the Pemberton Square municipal court there were more than thirty cases of drunkenness. Harry Beggo was arraigned for profanity, Charles Cardio for trespass and Dominick Arbetti was fined $5 for spitting on the sidewalk. Two men paid $3 fines each for occupying the streets for the sale of goods. Mary McKenna was fined $5 for drunkenness.

In the Roxbury court Charles Green, sixteen years of age, was fined $3 for picking a small branch from a tree in Franklin Park.

The police of South Boston had gathered in four persons for intoxication and Patrick McLaughlin was arraigned on a trespass on the property of the New Haven railroad. The police seem to it that the property of a big corporation is protected, but the property of the people, like Boston Common, may take care of itself.

Look at a couple of these heinous crimes that engaged the attention of South Boston policemen: Anthony O. Baron, thirteen years old, taking quart of milk from doorstep. Fined $3. Thomas O. Harr, fifteen years old, taking quart of milk. Fined $3. Patrick House, eleven years old, larceny of sweeping.

Katherine Pike, in the Roxbury court, was charged with profanity.

In the East Boston court three pairs of women were arraigned for quarreling. In the Charlestown court nine men were arraigned for drunkenness.

Commissioner O'Meara Declares He Can Do Nothing to Rid This Famous Breathing Spot from Vice and Crime

What the Great and General Court of Massachusetts indignantly refused to do time and time again because of their consideration for the feelings of the citizens of Boston, Commissioner O'Meara, head of the Boston police force, has done by one of his simple, autocratic mandates—that is, segregate vice in this city.

And of all sections in which to carry out his plan he has chosen Boston Common, the famous breathing spot in the heart of the city about which so many sacred traditions cluster! It is enough to make the sepulchred dead of the Old Granary Burial Ground turn over in their graves.

For no other construction can be put upon Commissioner O'Meara's attitude in refusing to make more adequate arrangements for the protection of the decent people of the city from the thugs, thieves and rowdies who rendezvous on the Common, than that he has thrown open this spot to them, where they may go and ply their odious business without fear of police molestation.

In refusing more police protection to the Common, as requested by Mayor Fitzgerald, Commissioner O'Meara has made two statements of such an arrogant nature as to cause some of his most ardent friends to gasp with astonishment and to force some of Boston's most prominent citizens to utter emphatic protest.

The Boston American some months ago had occasion to call the attention of its readers to conditions in the crime-reeking sections of the city that called for prompt and effective police attention. This newspaper was actuated by no other feeling than that the police, who are supposed to be the servants of the people who pay their salaries, should be made to do their duty.

But Mr. O'Meara replied to such charges as were brought against his administration with not much more than a shrug of the shoulders and a remark that the police force was all right; that the vile conditions complained of were "trivial matters," and that the attacks were inspired by spite.

Those who know what usually follows when a citizen makes a complaint against a member of the police force will hesitate to believe that anyone would risk his future in bringing a "trivial" complaint against a policeman. All that the public could do at the time notorious hotel scandals were agitating Boston did not induce Mr. O'Meara to emerge from the seclusion of his office and mingle sufficiently with the common people to learn the truth about conditions.

The same attitude that Mr. O'Meara assumed then he takes in connection with Boston Common. People are actually beginning to ask what kind of a man Boston has as the head of her police force—is he a man who does not know what the conditions are in the city, or does he not care?

Commissioner O'Meara says that it is not a violation of law for persons to be "rude" in the Common. He says that the police have no right to interfere if persons are "vulgar," or "offensive," or drunk. He says that he can't transfer squads of policemen to particular places because the citizens of those places raise a hue and cry, and that spasmodic raids by the police don't do any good anyhow. He says that forty policemen could not improve conditions on the Common.

Mr. O'Meara cannot believe that Boston people are going to take these remarkable statements seriously, for the simple reason that they do not believe they are true.

When a crime is committed in any section of Boston or any other city the first thing that the head of the police force does is to concentrate his force in that section and clear up the crime. When the murderous highwaymen shot down and robbed the two Lynn citizens the head of the Lynn police force got his entire command after the criminals at once, and he got them. It is by sudden, unexpected, determined dashes with a large force of police that criminals are so cowed that they hesitate to commit crimes.

But, on the other hand, what does O'Meara do in connection with the Boston Common case? He gives notice to the criminals that they are safe in the Common, and he gives notice to respectable women of Boston that they are only safe after nightfall when they keep away from the Common.

Not a single newspaper in this city nor a single citizen of any prominence can be found who has dared to attempt to justify the peculiar attitude of Commissioner O'Meara.

In view of these things the American, without caring about the matter in the least one way or the other, ventures to suggest to the Republicans of the Eleventh Congressional District that they had best think the matter over pretty carefully from all standpoints before they nominate a man for Congressman who possesses the peculiar attributes of Mr. O'Meara.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF TRADE DEMANDS REMOVAL OF COMMISSIONER O'MEARA

The Boston Women's Board of Trade has joined its protest to the complaints against conditions on the Common and the lack of proper police protection. Following is the letter which the members of the board sought the benches for the purpose of having a little talk to themselves undisturbed. I noticed one particular gang of young men who were veritable devils. There were seven of them. They seemed to have gone to the Common for the purpose of devising ways and means of inflicting mental torture upon the unprotected. I seated there. It looked as though it were the intention of the gang trying to drive from the park all the respectable people so that it might be given up to hoodlumdom unmolested.

In what I have said I do not want any one to get the idea that I am writing a word against a man or woman because he or she is poorly dressed or unfortunate. I would be the last woman in the world to add to the misery of any such. I know too much about the suffering of the poor and the unfortunate in this world and I would rather that my right hand would drop in a paley than add one additional pain to their hearts.

Poor men, ragged men, unemployed men, seeking women—for work, not for evil words of compassion. These are not the people who make the Boston Common dangerous; this class of persons have regard for the law and for decency, and they should be open to them and it should be kept in such a condition that they would be free to enjoy it without rude molestation.

Neither have I word of criticism against the numerous lover-like couples that I saw. It is natural for young people to fall in love, and it is natural for them to seek a park in which to walk and to build their castles that are the inheritance of youth and romance. They do not annoy any one—indeed, they are unconscious of the world around them, so much are they wrapped up in each other.

No, I have no word of censure for these honest, loving, young couples, and even if I should happen to be compelled to make a stolen kiss or two that would not be enough to make me cry "Police" unless I were fully assured that my voice would not reach a blue coated officer.

Yes, I would not disturb the unfortunate in the Common in the poor old down-and-out, dreaming away those bright visions of young manhood when he aimed to conquer the world. There is the nonpolitician, who fancies he holds the solution of all problems of state in the hollow of his Ancient maxim of a modern mariner.

SOMEWHERE out on the broad Atlantic off the northeast New England coast, Lawyer Nathaniel Watson Ladd is being rocked in the cradle of the deep. His cradle is nothing larger and smaller than a sixteen foot canoe no more worthy of being called a seagoing craft than one would a dugout.

Under a broad sunshade of a straw hat, the erstwhile lawyer is steering his tiny shell of a boat northward, and if the breeze be will, the billows are before him and behind him.

A merry life he is making, for one of Ale's Selkirk, he is lord of all he surveys.

DRAPER ACCUSED BY BRAND WHO CALLS FOR HALTING OF DOCK DEAL

TRY TO KILL OFF RIVALS

Official Declares State Executive Is Attempting to Commit Political Suicide.

FREDERICK J. BRAND, member of the Boston City Council, takes issue with Governor Draper on the proposed leasing of Commonwealth Pier at South Boston to the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

"If Governor Draper is trying to commit political suicide he is going about it in the right way," says Brand.

Mr. Brand says—and the other members of the City Council agree with him—that Governor Draper's bargain with the New Haven road should be halted and that the city should be allowed to take over the Commonwealth docks.

The City Council has unanimously adopted an order offered by Brand, asking the Governor to [illegible] Pier.

Power to lease up the matter of acquisition by the city of these docks so that they may be leased to the best advantage for Boston.

Wants City Ownership.

The city should purchase and hold the docks like other great cities do, Brand says.

Brand was honored with election as chairman [illegible] Council of Monday's election. He is one of the boldest Republicans in Massachusetts politics and has come out in favor of the [illegible] Governor Draper's plan. It is certain to [illegible] Council has unanimously adopted by the State.

"The city of Boston," declared Councilman Brand, "should have [illegible] Pier. Governor Draper's proposition to lease it to the New Haven road is a [illegible] Commonwealth Pier. Boston's interests are not [illegible] Pier, and it should [illegible] Pier by the New Haven road [illegible] meet when its only possible rival in Boston [illegible] Trunk is being pressed [illegible] to enter the port of Boston.

Suspicious of New Haven.

"Far be it from me," says the Dorchester Councilman, "to attempt to fathom what is in the minds of the responsible men at the head of the New Haven system. Far be it from me, also, to say that the Governor would sacrifice the commercial welfare of Boston just to help out his friends in the New Haven offices.

"But we may be allowed to consider past events when we try to interpret the present situation. We do know that the New Haven has been battling up Boston's transportation and traffic hooks ever for itself. And we do know that the impartial, feeling toward public service corporations that should be maintained by the chief executive of a Commonwealth has been thrown to the four winds by Governor Draper in his efforts to [illegible] the New Haven railroad. A league [illegible] recent merger controversy, and at its attendant controversies over hooking companies, taxation of stock, and so forth, will show that.

"Wherefore, I feel that there is something suspicious in the lease of the Pier, pier over at South Boston to the New Haven just at the moment when its only possible rival in Boston, the Grand Trunk, is being persuaded to enter this port.

"Why?" Asks Brand.

"Soon Commonwealth Pier has been nothing to idleness for years. Why has the New Haven allowed it to lie dormant all now? Is the only possible answer that the New Haven want to shut out the Grand Trunk or any other rival from accessibility to the rest of the railroad's water frontage in Boston?

"If this deal is put through Boston's commercial development will be set back for years and years. A road competing with the New Haven would give Boston merchants better service all around. Competition always means better service for patrons. That statement doesn't need any explanation or illustration.

"On the other hand, monopoly means poorer service. The corporation which has no competition doesn't have to worry about getting business. Business has to come to it. There is nowhere else to go.

"Go over and look at the South Boston

Try the "Lovdino Test" First; You May Not Be Soul-Mates, After All.

SPRINGFIELD, July 23.—Perfect matrimonial union, complete connubial happiness, the averting of mismating and the death knell to the divorce court—all, all are possible a sending to Dr. Judson Bradley, who lives to a modest cottage in Maiden Lane, this city.

Through the discovery of all the terse "lovdino fluid" Dr. Bradley is now the proud claimant to infallible knowledge which at once informs him whether a couple consulting him should fly to each other's arms and wed or flee and shun each other for the balance of their lives.

After many years of patient research and constant experiment in his laboratory, Dr. Bradley declares he has discovered the certain means of detecting that mysterious force which tends to bring two perfectly mated souls together in love which never pales nor grows cold.

The Old Doctor Is Busy.

Expert diagnoses on soul mating to love pining subjects are being given almost every day now by Dr. Bradley, who is declared by those who have consulted him to be the infallible "affinity doctor." His modest little place in Maiden Lane has been appropriately dubbed "Affinity Farm."

The "lovdino fluid" love test has been applied by Dr. Bradley to couples from all over the country. Men and women anxious to know if they are true yokefellows for life are visiting Dr. Bradley from Boston all New England, New York, Chicago, and even more distant parts of the country. He has tested them all.

Many are sent away rejoicing to the nearest minister to be knotted together with the bonds of matrimony for life, while some Dr. Bradley has forbidden to wed. There have been couples who have dared to defy this bidding and those, it is said have early learned to their sorrow that the "lovdino fluid" test is infallible.

Test Is Impressive.

The test is impressive as well as curious for Dr. Bradley asked 13 questions of the young men and women who visit him. He places the man his left, the woman to his right. Then he places the finger tips of his right hand at the base of the young woman's brain and the finger tips of his left hand at the base of the young man's brain and awaits the touring of the "lovdino fluid" through his nerves, which he has trained by years of study to detect.

Dr. Bradley remains impassive, almost rigid for five minutes—rarely longer—and at the expiration of that time or oftentimes less his composure either beams with supreme happiness and content or is distorted into an expression of the greatest mental pain and foreboding.

The expression of happiness argues that "lovdino fluid" has mysteriously assured the "Affinity Doctor" that his subjects are passing soul-mates, while the facial contraction betoken the message that union between the man and woman consulting him would be followed by life long wrangle-bickering and possibly physical as well as spiritual tragedy. These couples he advises sternly to avoid each other as though they were shunning some dire plague.

Doctor Explains the Fluid.

"Lovdino" explained Dr. Bradley today, "is just a vital force akin to steam or electricity, and it is a much more powerful and important agency, as it is the thermometer of the human heart. I am in my seventy-fourth year and for nearly forty years I have grappled with the mystery of the strange force which draws together members of the opposite sex.

"No man has delved more thoroughly into the arcana of psychology or studied more minutely the unseen grist of the modern divorce court. With the persistence of a hound on the trail of a fox, I have continued my researches all these years, until at last I have wrested the secret from the realm of mystery.

"I have learned how human and soul-ities until I can distinguish the delightful vibration of true soul love, glorious and edifying in its purity, from the false, heart-racking tremor of the mere earthly passion which but too often masquerades in the guise of genuine love and leads hosts of deluded couples into the meshes of its cruel net.

Humanity's Hope Is Here.

"Science has decided correctly that the seat of love is at the base of the brain, but I have located the actual cells that give forth the mating rail, and from these very important cells emanate the 'lovdino fluid' vibrations, the discovery and intelligent use of which are going to reserve for all of us from the terrible and growing evil of this day.

"When I put my finger-tips over these brain cells of my patients I feel the vibrations, first one and then the next, as would be the shock received from an electric battery, if the current was not at all alive to. When I detect that the couples are true soul mates I permit them away to the clergy. I know instantly from the discordant vibrations when they are not mated and guess I implore to abus such unions.

"My great secret must not die. I have selected several persons to whom I shall impart the science of the 'lovdino fluid' and its wonderful power, so that if I die suddenly the grand secret will not be lost to the world."

CURTISS FOR CUMMINGS.

Board Was Not Unanimous in Rejecting Latter's Appointment.

Of all the men appointed to office by Mayor Fitzgerald and rejected by the Civil Service Commission Matthew Cummings is the only one whose rejection was not unanimous. It was generally known that Civil Service Commissioner Elmer L. Curtiss refused to agree to Cummings's rejection, even after his colleagues had continued their discussion of Cummings's case in the hope of securing a unanimous verdict. The records of the Civil Service Commission show the following:

May 9—Matthew Cummings appointed to be superintendent of public buildings by Mayor Fitzgerald.

May 10—Civil Service Commission sent request to the Mayor for a hearing on Cummings's appointment.

May 14—Certificate of qualifications received from the Mayor.

June 7—Civil Service Commission met and considered Cummings's case. Commissioners not unanimous, so adjourned to June 9.

June 9—Commissioners voted not to approve Cummings's appointment. Commissioner Curtiss dissenting.

CONDITION OF METAL MARKET CLARIFYING

By E. A. WILKINS.

STATE STREET, July 23.—There is a gradual clarifying of copper metal market conditions, which is reflected to some extent in the shares market. From all appearances, the Rothschilds have agreed with the two large American interests to curtail the production of copper. Although stock market interests do not give it full credence, one who speaks by the card says that it is a fact, although there will be no official announcement. Conferences have been held, both here and in Europe, and the understanding is to [illegible] per cent. reduction in the output for three months and 10 per cent. for the following six months. This will bring about control of the copper market and keep it [illegible] within the consumptive demand it is hoped. It is good business and there can be no argument against it, providing that nothing unlawful can be brought out by the same move.

In reality it is an understanding, not an agreement, so that no restraint of trade is intended. It is self-preservation. Without such action many believe that copper would ultimately have broken to 10 cents a pound. Very few mines could be operated profitably with copper at that level. There is a question, however, if the price of the metal has not gradually approached a natural curtailment point when it would have been only a question of a short time before the worst of the situation was seen.

The action of the past few days would indicate that a change of sentiment has taken place. There is a less apathetic condition of affairs and prices have responded to the bettered conditions only not in an entirely satisfactory manner. London seemed to have the good news first and there was immediate response in the price of copper warrants abroad with extra heavy buying of Amalgamated Copper stock in the American market. Although copper reacted there, the stimulus imparted by Amalgamated purchases lasted through to the week end.

The recovery in the price of Calumet & Hecla shares from the low of $500 is considered significant, in a way. Lake Copper has also behaved well, in all probability the [illegible] interest has acquired a fair amount of [illegible] at around current market quotations. The so-called Cole-Ryan stocks show [illegible] weakness in price making, and they are good leads to follow. The unexpected reduction of the National Lead Company's common stock dividend brought a feeling of unsettlement in coppers, coming at a time when nervous conditions prevailed. Notwithstanding Friday's weakness in the stock market, when several new low records for the year were made, the metal stocks maintained a firm front.

In fact, coppers have led in the week's market and gains have been fairly well maintained. Sentiment is purely optimistic on them, and while confidence is a plant of slow growth, it is bound to flourish with proper conditions. A change in general market conditions would see coppers in the van, but this will not occur until the New York Bar has been thoroughly liquidated and the big interests show a disposition to bull the market.

While prices in New York declined from 1 to 2¾ points this forenoon, copper shares in the local market held notably strong. Amalgamated and Calumet & Arizona were the only stocks to weaken, and the former only went off ⅜ of a point in Wall Street. In fact, there was little or nothing doing in copper shares outside of a little manipulation in Lake and North Butte. Commission house business is exceedingly light. There is, however, a fairly good undertone to coppers in general.

The weakness of Steel common upset the New York, list. A report which can hardly be given credence is that the steel business at the present time is but 50 per cent of normal. Apart from Amalgamated, the New York list moved pretty uniformally toward a lower level, and many of the inactive specialties showed very pronounced weakness. Steel made a low for the year at 65¾ and Southern Pacific at 103¾. Reading displayed great weakness, while Union Pacific rushed well above the low point reached some time ago. The New York banks are fortifying themselves by gathering in cash resources. To-day's statement shows an increase of $13,170,775 in surplus, bringing the total up to $40,213,425. Loans were reduced $6,013,800 and deposits were added to by $7,894,900. Specie increased $13,426,000 and legals $1,718,500.

DOVES DEFEATED BY CUBS IN FAST TEN-INNING GAME

Tailenders Get Jump on League Leaders, Piling Up Five Runs; Lose in Tenth.

BOTH TEAMS IN SLUGFEST

Cubs' Grand Rally With the Stick a Critical Period; Turns Defeat to Victory.

CHICAGO, Ill., July 23.—The Cubs locked the doors in a great ten-inning slugging contest this afternoon. Score: 7 to 6.

Fifteen hard hits were made and they enjoyed every moment of the slugfest which was replete with extra base drives. Seven clouts for extra bases were made, four of them doubles, two triples and a home run. Collins was the man who made the circuit on his slam and got credit for the victory. Mathewson was touched for fifteen hits and fell before the onslaught of the Doves while Mitchell was the Jove who could not be touched. Mathewson's relief corps had a tough task and it took a lot of good pitching to stop the Doves.

Doves Get the Lead

The Doves had all the best of the early innings and in the Cubs' home in fourth they were leading by a comfortable margin. Mathewson's batting arm and his good glossy for the Doves. Then the slaughtering began. A base on balls to Magee, a single by Dooin, a double by Miller, a single by Collins and a home run by Murphy made the first five runs of the game. Mathewson retired Bridwell, Evers and Chance in order, but Hofman and Kling got to him for a double, driving home a couple of runs and leaving the score:

The Cubs took the lead in the seventh. The Doves tied it in the eighth, then the game went into extra innings.

Hand Game to Cubs

In the tenth the Doves scored the first run of the game. Sheckard hit a high fly which fell safely back of second because the Boston fielders stood about, each waiting for the other to get it. Hofman sacrificed him to third. Zimmerman then hit to Alperman and the latter threw to first, forcing Zimmerman at the plate. Zimmerman was out, Mitchell to Hofman. Mitchell fouled his hit to Archer, who muffed and threw past the runner a fit at first and permitting Zimmerman to score the run that lost for Boston.

Boston Has Once More Proved That It Is the Greatest Baseball City.

By Dyke Clark.

WHAT more convincing proof is needed to prove that Boston is the greatest baseball city in the country than the fact that the Red Sox are the best looking pennant contenders in the American League today, that the record crowds that have attended the games in Boston during the championship race of 1910 are the largest ever known in baseball history, and that the Tigers, champions of the American League, are the greatest drawing card in baseball?

TRAFFIC MEN HAVE GREAT TIME ON THE LINKS AT WATERTOWN

Transporting the Public Is Forgotten in Struggle for Golf and Gastronomic Honors.

CHARLES TURNER WINNER

Prominent Railroad Guests Are Royally Entertained at Oakley by the Boston Traffic Club.

THE first open handicap of the Boston Traffic Golf Club at the Oakley Country Club, Watertown, was such a grand success that the members voted informally to make it an annual feature. Today the all absorbing question among members is not whether the Grand Trunk strike is settled, but "What was your score?"

The guests came from points as far west as Pittsburg and Chicago. The men who sit enthroned at desks and direct the details of the great railroad systems laid aside the dignity and the cares of office, and gathered for a good time. It was "Hello, Bill!" and "How are you, Jack?" The loitering resembled a crowd of boys let loose from school, or a college class assembling after years. Everybody however, promised to be fainted lifeless, was a hale fellow well met.

Big "Guns" Were There.

Carl Howe of Buffalo was there. Every railroad man knows Carl. He is general manager of the New York Central fast freight lines, and has the reputation of looking like 11 cream puffs in a row.

S. M. Wemer manager of the New York Central lines in Chicago came all the way from the Windy City to play golf. G. M. Reid [illegible] general passenger agent. H. M. Pow[illegible] J. M. Hustis of the Boston & Albany, A. S. Crane and W. K. Sanderson of the Boston & Maine, M. Inglis of the Lehigh Valley, George Morton of the C. B. & Q., E. B. Kelly of Brooklyn, H. H. Vreeland of the United States Steel Products Company, J. A. Marvin, traffic manager of the National Automobile Association and R. R. Whitman of the Boston American were also present.

Host, now, but it was a humble day for golf. A cool breeze blew from off the sky was cloudless, and there was action on the links. The perfect day was in keeping with the temper of the players most of whom entered into the spirit of the good natured remarks of a considerable gallery. Among those of the players who were out of practice are notable, and more than one [illegible] head of the day's [illegible] feared the foul and foul not to reach to the tees.

Wit Flowed Freely.

Among the dishes was blueberry pie such as mother used to make. It pardonable a bit with "Skip." While he was paying it the closest attention a man [illegible] asked him a question about the golf match under discussion. "It's a foursome, [illegible] said Skip, with his mouth full, chewing lustily. "It's a bottleneck."

Witty repartee such as "Skip" had been rewarded from the [illegible] of the [illegible] committee. It had been suggested specially voted to have this harrowing [illegible] of the [illegible] of the conference to this request. It is related [illegible]

Immediately after the [illegible] The match is eighteen holes with [illegible] seven bogey. There [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] a proper golf course. The [illegible] [illegible] of the holes is over [illegible] of a hitter, the players call it. There was plenty of "laughing" at the [illegible] in play. This was as perpetrated by W. H. Libby, secretary of the Traffic Men's Club.

Nevertheless there was good golf played as shown by the scores. The first great prize, a gold watch, for the lowest gross score was won by Charles H. Turner, with eighty-seven. The record is eighty-eight. The second great prize, a silver medal, for the lowest net score was captured by H. C. Brooks with a net eighty-one. Our old friend "Skip" Boyd took the number 2 prize with the lowest net score of eighty-one.

Officers of the Club.

The officers of the Boston Traffic Golf Club are A. W. Manning, president; H. H. Palmer, treasurer, and W. P. Libby, secretary. The club is composed of railroad men and the representatives of the great railroad industrial corporations. The handicap committee consists of [illegible] N. Bates, Samuel McDonald and Edward Boyd.

Following is a list of the players and their net scores:

AMERICA'S SWIFTEST HORSES IN GRAND CIRCUIT MEETING AT KALAMAZOO

Rich Purse for 2.11 Trotters, Value at $10,000. Many New England Entries.

GEERS STABLE A MAGNET

Boston Horsemen Also Interested in Mc[illegible] Pace, 2:10

Kalamazoo, Mich., July 23.—The Kalamazoo Grand Circuit meeting, which will be held on the [illegible] track, will be one of the most interesting of the season. The meeting is also a memorial to Fred Wyse, who was one of the best drivers in training that ever owned a horse, and his death [illegible] end of the season.

The [illegible] will be taxed to their utmost, for besides the horses that raced at Grand Rapids there are many stables that will break into the game here this week.

The way the horses stepped at Grand Rapids and it reports that have come from the training quarters of those that will make their first start here, leads to the belief that the opening of the Grand Circuit will be marked by sensational racing.

There is a suspicion that some of the horses that started at Grand Rapids were not asked to go extremely hard races. It is considered good judgment by many trainers and owners to give their horses at least one race to good company before they try to put Dan Patch records down on them.

Geers's Stable the Magnet

This race [illegible] chance to see and the [illegible] and also [illegible] side up if [illegible] they are to line up against down the line, but the money that is hung up for the five days' racing here will be incentive enough to make the racing fully up to the standard.

That the majority of the owners and trainers will take the view that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush, goes without saying.

It is probable that the public will as usual follow the fortunes of Mr. Geers's stable, even though the veteran trainer may not be able to resume his place behind them. He is recovering rapidly from his unfortunate accident at Grand Rapids, but it is doubtful if he will be able to drive his horses here this week. Mr. Jones, who is [illegible] Direct Hal, 2.04, at [illegible] work that his horses will be strong favorites in their classes even if Geers is not be [illegible] to drive [illegible].

[illegible] an of the meeting will be the [illegible] event, 2.11 trotting. Probably the Geer entry Dodie Archdale, 2.08¾, will be a strong favorite for the first [illegible] somewhat over the stronger, but she will be up against a strong field of seasoned [illegible] and the [illegible] will not be [illegible].

Diss Likely Starter

[illegible] to drive the horses and [illegible] for the New Hampshire [illegible] syndicate, has both Diss, 2.11, Bingara, and Mona J., 2.10¾, in [illegible] the Great, entered, but it is [illegible] that Diss will be the one selected to go after the big stake. Though [illegible] last week Dodie Archdale is undoubtedly a very fast mare, but in one of the delicate kind, at least [illegible] and she [illegible] be [illegible] to [illegible] that she will have [illegible] in fancy time, but [illegible] there is that old mare Alice Roosevelt, that is undoubtedly faster than ever [illegible] season and with Tommy Murphy behind her always likely to make trouble.

Then McDonald's entry, Justo, 2.10¾, is another entry in which [illegible] horses are interested. With nineteen horses eligible to start, the [illegible] will be red hot battle, with Dodie Archdale the one [illegible] will carry the [illegible] people's money.

The big [illegible] event for the pacers is the 2.07 pace, in which the field of starters will be [illegible] Chamber of Commerce stake at Detroit and a $5,000 event, which makes it one of the swell events for the side-wheelers.

The [illegible] owned by George H. Paterbrook, Denver, Col., who won at Grand Rapids in high class field, and a fast record of 2.04¾, will probably be the one that will be most favored in this race.

Cox Has Two Eligible.

Walter Cox will have a chance to choose between Brenham Baughan, that was second to the Colorado flyer last week, and the up-country mare, Lady Isle, 2.12¾, for this race. Greer also has a choice between Direct Hal, 2c, and The Abbe, both of which have been doing fine work. It will be a great battle in the opinion of those who have followed the horses entered in their races and in their work.

The much mooted question as to how good a race horse the chestnut stallion Ace Wilkes, 2.09¼, the member of Walter Cox's stable that cut such a wide swath, may be found on the 2.09 pace on Tuesday. The son of Roan Wilkes started at Grand Rapids, but many Boston men believe he wasn't quite ready for a race. Among others that will be well fixed for this event is the bay stallion King Cole, by Rhineo, 2.09¼, that lowered his record to 2.07¾, in his winning race at Grand Rapids.

Will Jones's son-in-law, Margit (by Spanish Queen and Country Jay entered in the 2.05 trot, which is scheduled for Friday. It will be a difficult proposition to pick a winner in that event. The Boston mare, Sonoma Girl, would naturally be a favorite over the others but for the fact that she behaved badly here at Grand Rapids, that was won in slow time by that supposed back number, Uno.

[illegible] two-minute pacer the Canadian [illegible] Ned, and Boston mare, Alice Wilkes will have a chance to get back at the Nevada gelding. Gifftine, that took him into camp at Grand Rapids just Friday. It should be a good race, with George taking a possibility, in spite of the fact that he brought up at the tail end of the summary in last week's race.

AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY NEVER LOOKED MORE PROSPEROUS THAN NOW

Manufacturers Make Great Preparation for Future. Highway Hearing on Friday.

By J. C. KERRISON.

THOSE who think for a single moment that the "Motor Age" has reached the zenith of its height and glory are doomed to disappointment. There is every indication that the future season will be more prosperous, more productive of owners, riders and drivers than ever before.

There is not the slightest reason to believe there will be a diminution in either the demand or the supply; in fact, to tell the truth, the demand at this date far exceeds the supply, and that, too, despite the early statement of a great increase in product, and the cry of "oversupply" heard early in the season.

The motor manufacturers are to-day enjoying the greatest period of their existence, and as a whole are planning to turn out cars in greater numbers than ever. The automobile industry is one of the very few industries that is not complaining of hard times. It is booming as it never boomed before, and the great rank and file are making overtures for the purchase of new cars.

As an indication of what the future promises the fact that one of the two big combines in this country are contemplating producing something like 10,000 cars, where in 1910 the product of this same combine amounted to approximately 50,000 cars. It is conservatively estimated that the product for 1911 will amount to something like 300,000 cars with an average value of $1,250.

And another thing that perhaps shows the trend of affairs is found in the statement that many of the 1911 cars will bring a higher price than they did in 1910 which is certainly indicative of a maintenance of prices.

PRO GOLFERS MEET ON THE LINKS IN BIG TOURNEY

All the Stars of the Fascinating Sport Competing Makes Event Notable One.

AGAIN this week it is the professionals that hold sway in a championship golf tournament. This event, however, is the championship tournament of the Eastern Professional Golf Association, and will be held next Tuesday and Wednesday over the course of the Wykagyl Country Club.

Rather than have a series of professionals championship meetings as concluded in the plans for this year's meeting, for the play instead of being the usual medal play, will be match play, the winner of the title to be decided in this manner. This decision was reached at the annual meeting of the association held at the Astor House on June 6th. The program will call for eight eights, which within the first eight division will qualify for the championship and the other two divisions will continue for money prizes.

Some of the Stars.

With such well-known performers as Alex. Smith, Willie Anderson, George Sargent, Jesse Isaacs and Nipper Campbell fighting it out at match play, the tournament will become for golf, something that anything of a similar nature ever attempted in this country. The Executive Committee and officers of this organization are: President, Devereux Emmet; vice president, George Strath, secretary, Herbert Barker; treasurer, Irvin Hunter, and the Executive Committee also includes W. W. Tye, Herbert Strong, Harry Stuppon, Edward Madden, Jr., and Alexander Gilfillan.

The Massachusetts event at Hathorne Beach promises to attract a large field of amateurs in the tournament to be held there Saturday, July 30th. South Scituate, Mass., this event will be held in strict accordance with the rules governing the Golf Association of the United States, which has never been surpassed in the management of such a match. Every arrangement that human ingenuity can suggest to make the occasion a pleasant one for the visiting golfers will be made.

Plans have been completed for the construction of a number of spiked gravel paths, which will be used for the first time in this championship in singles and doubles is played and various other tournaments for ladies and men of a junior nature.

Already it seems as though the open tournament will be a success. This full quota of entries, as well as the fact that each of the thirty-three open meetings scheduled for only fourteen have been played, thus showing the golfing [illegible] is in its prime.

BEVERLY YACHT CLUB HAS FINE RACES

Southwest Winds Give Craft of Different Classes Chance to Do Hard Battle.

BEZZARDS BAY, July 23.—The large crowd that witnessed the third Corinthian race of the Beverly Yacht Club, sailed in the bay this afternoon, off Wings Neck, saw the sailing in each class near despite the fact that the sonder races were held across the bay on the Sippican course, the sailing here drew many of the prominent yachtsmen of the Summer colony.

In the afternoon there was a moderate day sail, the wind blowing from the southwest and it gave the contestants just what they wanted. At the starting gun the wind breezed a trifle, giving each boat a good start and showed the racing qualities in each event to quick advantage.

The air was perfect for the spectators and many of the boats of the Summer colony were on hand to cheer their favorite craft. Captain Kendrick, served lunch to over 120 guests on the clubhouse before the races.

Barnacle is Last.

In the twenty-one-foot class, the Barnacle, which headed them all last week, did not show such well, the last home not being to her fittings and she finished last being beaten by the Terrapin, which has shown some good form in the last three races were six boats in this class and they were a pretty course 13 miles over the bay. Wing's Neck. The Lethe, Joshua Conant's craft, proved herself a most dangerous aspirant for the honors held by the Terrapin.

The afternoon first class gave the entire places some very close racing and racing that was also fast. Three boats, twelve in Summer, were sent out over course 15 to Nine Island and return.

When starting gun was fired the boats went off bunched, but after going to Wings Neck, out to the bay, the boats spaced and picked their courses for good weather work.

Macoh Is Easy Winner.

The Macoh, a new craft to show out well took the lead on the home run and despite all the efforts could not be headed to the finish line. The Terrapin, which was second, pushed behind her.

There was also some exciting finishes between the Rebuan, Kin, Flicker and Yarbo, which finished in the order and positions named within four seconds. The summary of boats which made this class the most exciting in the regatta.

Those only have five entries in the day and Master Emmons again sailed one cup winning work. Three little races were sent over course 22 to the [illegible] back to Wing's Neck over the course sailed by Miss Fiberling at 9:45 a.m. In this class also the sailing was of a high order. P. V. A. Lamb was in strong to defend his title, but could not hold another regatta with the other experts in action.

Ellen, the Defender, Wins Sonder Race Through Foul

owned by George Wightman and challenging in the name of the Hingham Yacht Club. The boat was not measured in and was not allowed to start. The boat is a new one, designed by George Owen and built by Rice brothers, at East Boothbay. It was looked upon as a dark horse in the cup contest and was the first time that the Hingham club had ever attempted to go cup hunting.

The Harpoon, a new sonder, built on lines nearly like those of the Ellen, did her best work on the windward legs of the course, and the Ellen suffered her on the runs. All the boats made a much better showing on the beats than on the runs.

Cima Goes Over Line Late.

The Cima, the Manchester challenger, designed by Mower of New York and sailed by Guy Lowell, got a bad start, and never was able to overcome the handicap, although at the last mark she made the turn fifteen seconds ahead of the Ellen. The boat, representing the Eastern Yacht Club of Marblehead, went fast on the beats, running close to the Ellen on the third leg. On the second run to Strawberry Hill the Cima made the fastest time of all.

Again handicapped her for a place.

One thing was clearly demonstrated in yesterday's race and that is that the Sally XI needs a whole lot of wind to win any races against the Harpoon or Ellen. On the beat to the first mark after the start the Sally XI ran well down toward Pemberton pier and got the benefit of the strong ebb tide, which paved her well up with the two leaders. She tried the same game on the third leg, but the tide had turned and she lost ground.

Adams Skilful Skipper.

That Mr. Adams knows his boat and knows Hull Bay, with its currents, tides and variable winds, was demonstrated pretty clearly yesterday. Once at the Peddocks Island mark, when everybody thought he had over-reached the mark, he came about, skated on top of it, gooked a number of people the run along to Strawberry Hill.

At no time in the race was the Quincy challenger threatened until on the second run down to Strawberry Hill. The Ellen, feeling a breeze that had evidently shut out the Harpoon, crept up on her weather and off Pumpkin Island passed into the lead but not enough to gain much as the Harpoon held on. At the mark, where the Ellen secured the Ellen was ready to [illegible] Mr. Adams and [illegible] He sent the Harpoon up into the quarter and forged ahead of the Harpoon, barely enough, for in the beat to Peddocks the Harpoon crept up on the Ellen and [illegible] Ellen's lee and [illegible] reaching to the finish.

Two Sonders Fight.

The Harpoon and Ellen came for the race with sonders and drawing, and it was somewhat of a surprise that the Ellen was not awarded the race. [illegible]

[illegible] It took stretches to surprise but when the fourth became known Mr. Adams was [illegible] by all for his act.

The race to morrow will start at 11 o'clock at Hull and the Ellen from the position she will have to beat Harpoon and Cima to the finish line. The Cima and Sally XI are far from being out of the contest, if they work as they yesterday are also entering, and the Ellen proved herself very fast in a good breeze whenever she caught one.

The race attracted a large number to the clubhouse of the Boston club, many even hiring launches and power craft proceeding a short distance.

LADY PAGET TEACHES TRUST MAGNATES HOW TO BLUFF AT POKER

LIMIT A TRIFLE AT $250

By A. J. LAMBERT.

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, July 23.—The Lady Paget who has lost neither her beauty nor her love for the pomp and pageantry of London with her exclusive and fashionable set—

All society has been discussing the remarkable poker game of which she was the giver and to which she gathered several big trust magnates and inaugurally proved that, though they might know more about trade combinations, she was far more skilful at poker than they. It was a "stiff game," all jackpots, with a $250 limit. The Trust interests participating were oil, represented by Graham Miller of California; steel, by Judge E. H. Gary; literature and groceries by Frank Munsey, tobacco, by James B. Duke; and the fruit-mine side of tin by Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt.

There was intense amusement when Lady Paget won pot after pot, and finally raked in the biggest pot of the evening with a "busted flush," making several of the trust magnates throw down their hands.

Pokeritis a Revised Craze

As a consequence Lady Paget is receiving constant and pressing invitations to genuine games of poker, and the parties and pokerites there are to be a revived craze.

At the Ritz this week there was a gathering of American women over a considerable part of the year in Paris who objected being left out of the fashionable and derise regulars as ofnots for what is termed the Social Trust of Paris, controlled by Mrs. George Gould, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Sr. From what is learned the recent season in Paris created considerable bitterness, as entrance into exclusive French circles by Americans was seemingly unobtainable without the O K of either Mrs. Vanderbilt or Mrs. Munsey.

What is particularly galling to the anti-control cyclists, it is said, is that many American women are not found to be "in the swim" at the Ritz gathering did not evolve any definite scheme, some one expressing the hopelessness of the situation by asking, "What can you do about it—

$500 For One Dance.

There was a striking and beautiful illustration American frolic entertainment at a recent cotillion given by Mrs. Vincent, an extremely wealthy Lady of Honor and niece of Speaker Lowther.

After the first figure, wherein only thirty-five picked couples participated, the music stopped and there was wheeled into the room a huge basket of flowers. Boldly the flowers fell apart and out jumped Mme. Pavlova, the famous Russian dancer. Between every figure of the cotillion either Pavlova or her male partner, Mordkin, danced, receiving $500 for each number, making the total cost of the entertainment one of the most expensive in London.

During the first number, owing to the absence of rosin on the floor, Pavlova slipped, but did not injure herself, the hostess exclaiming gleefully: "If she had injured her ankle I would have been obliged to pension her with thousands of pounds. How fortunate!"

One notable feature of the party was that the thirty-five couples were not selected for beauty or smartness, but for their personality, the hostess announcing that she wanted men and women with brains, which is a new note in English society.

Woman Obeyed Her Father, Who Didn't Die Until He Was 113.

BITOLIA, July 23.—A remarkable story of filial devotion and lovers' constancy is that of Maria Lekka, who now at the age of eighty has been married to her fiance, Joseph Stoicou, aged ninety-five, to whom she had been engaged for nearly sixty years.

As a girl of twenty Maria had consented to marry Stoicou, but her father having opposed the match, she had agreed that she would never marry as long as he lived. The father died just a week before the age of one hundred and thirteen, and yesterday the devoted lovers were married.

DEAD MAN IS APPOINTED.

Chaplain in King George's First List Died in 1908.

LONDON, July 23.—A post for a dead man was a strange feature of King George's first list of household appointments, in the official London Gazette, which contained numerous civil and military appointments at court, appeared the name of the Very Rev. Professor A. H. Charteris, D. D., LL. D., who was named for the post of Chaplain in Ordinary to the King in Scotland.

Later on a letter to the Times revealed the fact that Dr. Charteris died in 1908.

As President of English Philatelic Society He Has Work That Pleases Him.

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, July 23.—King George at last has found after a long hunt a job supervising the production of the new English postage stamps. He is president of the English Philatelic Society and is working on the proposition with character istic assiduity. He had had several rough designs submitted, but time for none of them met with his approval. He is endeavoring to get away from the traditional stamp and get something artistic, picturesque and symbolical, as is the case with the French and Tasmanian stamps.

Xenophantic members of the court suggest that his own portrait would be the best thing he could do, but the King is said to have replied that he thought it rather early in his career for that. He is pushing the matter with characteristic energy and expects to get the new stamps out before Christmas.

OLD SMITHY GOES.

Original of McAdams's Painting to Be Replaced.

SPRINGFIELD, July 23.—James Flynn, son of John Flynn, the veteran blacksmith south of Indian Orchard, whose shop was made famous in the world of art by the painter, J. W. McAdams, in his picture, "The New England Smith," is about to tear down his shop, which has long been shed by father and son for forty-five years, to make room for a house he is going to build in its place.

Mr. McAdams was attracted by the picturesqueness of the old shop and the fine, honest character of the Irish blacksmith within, who toiled at his fire and anvil day and many at his work, as did he whom Longfellow immortalized in "The Village Smithy."

The painter transferred the scene to canvas with remarkable realism, and the picture won prizes in several exhibitions.

B. F. KEITH STEALS MARCH ON MARTIN BECK IN THE WEST

When Latter Landed on Return From Europe He Found He Had a New Partner—Two Boston Plays.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

SOMETHING is going on in vaudeville that is not in plain view of the audience. Things have happened (with many indications of early encores) that lead to the reflection that B. F. Keith can play the role of a simple country gentleman at his summer home in Devereux and still keep his business eye on the situation.

Insurance solicitors tell you in solemn words that life is uncertain. Well, so is vaudeville, as Martin Beck discovered the other day when he stepped off the Mauretania (or was it the Lusitania?) and was informed by several kind gentlemen of the press that during his absence on the high seas he had acquired, quite unexpectedly, thank you, a new partner in several of the theatres in his Orpheum circuit. Of course, Mr. Beck was delighted to learn that his new partner was B. F. Keith.

Vaudeville patrons in New England do not hear much about Martin Beck, but out in the middle and far west he is the Solomon of the pack. His Orpheum circuit is a model organization that has brought riches to himself and "short jumps" to his artists who find it most convenient to play consecutive time in a chain of cities where the transportation expenses do not exceed salaries. Mr. Beck has been making considerable vaudeville noise for some time, and it has pleased a number of disturbers of vaudeville peace to circulate stories of his ambition to invade the East with his Orpheum circuit and take the kingly crown from Mr. Keith.

Rumors of this kind have always made good reading, because everybody knew that while Beck in a campaign of expansion would cover ground faster and not thoroughly than the advanced vaudeville warriors of a few years back, it was also generally accepted that Mr. Keith and his associates in the United Booking Office were not third rate fighters—and there would be

CAMPAIGN CARRIED TO MIDDLE WEST.

Whether Mr. Beck has nursed a foolish ambition for greater power is not altogether certain, but it may be set forth firmly that the quiet and peaceful invasion of the middle west by Mr. Keith will give Mr. Beck much to think about that will keep him on the other side of the Hudson River.

It is not believed that Mr. Keith's ventures into the Orpheum circuit in vaudeville warfare—far from it. It is aimed to prevent it, for with Mr. Keith as a partner it would be rank discourtesy on the part of Mr. Beck to cast covetous eyes on the eastern territory. And theatrical men with ambitions are noted for their business courtesy—not.

It was by a rather circuitous route that Mr. Keith journeyed into the western field. George B. Cox, who mixes politics with the drama, was the conductor. Mr. Cox purchased from Anderson and Ziegler their interest in theatres in Cincinnati, Louisville and Indianapolis, and this interest controls the properties, as Beck and his associates own but twenty per cent. of the stock in the six houses. Mr. Cox then promptly disposed of half of his interest in the theatres to Mr. Keith, bring ing about a condition of ownership that must have surprised Mr. Beck when he landed in New York.

It was the transfer of control in these houses that was announced early in the week, but nothing was said about the future operations of Mr. Keith. It is not believed that houses in Cincinnati, Louisville and Indianapolis alone can be of any special value to Mr. Keith and it is freely predicted that news of more astonishing conquests will hit the public eye before many weeks.

With Mr. Keith as his partner there is small likelihood of Mr. Beck cutting the ties that bind him to the United Booking Office, and the promoters of war who have been predicting a union of Beck and William Morris have nothing to fall back upon but very thin vapor.

BECK SMILES AND LOOKS HAPPY.

At any rate Mr. Beck is a philosopher. For a man whose Napoleonic inclinations have been crushed he bears himself well. "There is nothing that could have pleased me more," he declares, "than to find out that I have Mr. Cox and Mr. Keith as partners in Indianapolis, Louisville and Cincinnati.

"I shall not worry in the future about my interests in these theatres, as I know they will be fully protected. However, this invasion of the West on the part of Mr. Keith will lead to further deals which will bind us closer together.

"The deal which Mr. Cox has put through has indicated to me how the vaudeville interests of the East and West have to settle their differences. There will be a general amalgamation of interests; this is the only solution of the situation that has been created."

As for Mr. Keith—well, when you hear of any movement that is calculated to fill him with business dismay, just remember that he has never been caught sleeping at the switch.

* * * * * * *

William Morris, the incorporated, who represents the only serious and heavily armored vaudeville independent we have ever had, keeps right on expanding. Mr. Morris' plans for the future include a new theatre for Boston—at least that is what we are told—and he will have the booking of the new vaudeville theatre in Worcester that is to seat 2,500 people. Mr. Morris does not reveal the site of his new Boston theatre, but work on the Worcester house will begin at once. Edward W. Lynch will build the theatre in Worcester on the site of the old Lincoln House, and when finished it will be the largest vaudeville theatre in New England. With a seating capacity of 2,500 it will outrank the Bijou Dream, which seats 2172. In booking the new theatres through the Morris agency the independent forces secure a foothold in Worcester.

FORTY PLAYS BY FROHMAN.

Charles Frohman, who fears not the Open Door because he always carries a portable stage in his vest pocket, tosses further defiance into the face of the Syndicate's enemies by announcing forty new plays for the coming season. Mr. Frohman, apparently, is not keen on the American playwright, for less than 20 per cent. of his plays will be American—to be exact just seven of the forty are home made. He explains that he has wended through the nomadic output of American manuscripts with the hope of finding a great deal of sound material—but it wasn't there. The American playwright is "not producing the goods," he declares, and that is all there is to it. Of Mr. Frohman's forty plays sixteen will be English, thirteen are from the French, with three from Austria and one from Belgium.

With thirty-three foreign plays under production the season's output by Mr. Frohman will hit a new high water mark in dramatic importations.

* * * * * * *

The withdrawal of "The Clansman" from the American Music Hall after Friday evening's performances shows that public opinion carries a real influence in Boston. While it is extremely doubtful if the violent treatment of the race question in "The Clansman" aroused more than passing interest among the greater part of playgoers, it is always safe to reflect that no good ever came from needlessly offending anyone. On the other hand but few serious minded people in Boston give the Rev. Thomas Dixon and his writings more than scant attention, and it is hardly possible that he arouses any [illegible] with his literary fireworks. At any rate we are not so feeble minded as to believe that Mr. Dixon, with the stroke of a pen, can debase an entire race. We know better.

Mr. Morison's attitude has been fair minded and liberal. It is not to be supposed for a minute that he subscribes to the sentiments projected in Mr. Dixon's play. After all, was "The Clansman," as a play, worth the dispute?

* * * * * * *

During the coming week two Boston made plays will invite public approval, "The Blingville Bugle" at the American Music Hall, and "The Man's Game" at the Majestic Theatre. One will attempt to coax a laugh or two, and the other will engage you for three hours in a discussion of suffrage as the scenes of "The Man's Game" are laid in Colorado, and as Miss Charlotte Hunt is to play the leading role, there is more than a fair chance that woman will have the best of the argument. It is hoped that Miss Hunt, who has sobbed her way through two tear soaked plays in two weeks, will have the privilege of smiling across the footlights in "The Man's Game."

It will be a busy week for Boston's budding dramatists.

Summer Residents Show Amazing Skill in Establishing Botanical Gardens, Putting Colonies in First Place Among Resorts.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Curtis of the Navarre, Swampscott, and Mrs. Robert Shaw Russell of Chestnut street, Salem, are among those passing the week end at Tuna's Head Inn, Rockport. This is a favorite resort with the Swampscott contingent and each week several of the shore guests motor down for over Sunday.

Summering on this shore for the season are Mr. and Mrs. Bertram D. Conrad of Beverly.

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Martin gave their silver dinner party in honor of the birthday of their bride son on the broad lawn of the Lincoln House last evening, entertaining twenty little guests of the colony at a table.

Domiciled for the season at a cottage on Puritan road is Signor Dedino Menotti, the noted maestro, with Signorina Menotti and their little family.

J. Chancellor Crafts is at the large Houghton estate for the season. Mr. Crafts has brought all his fine horses and smart traps, some of them prizes.

Mrs. George Ide [illegible] of Boston is again registered at the New Ocean House for the summer.

Shore society gladly welcomed H. Pendleton Seymour of Worcester and New York [illegible] last week. Mr. Seymour has been long [illegible] at the Myopia colony.

Added in the large Philadelphia colony at the resort are Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Ridgway and Miss Ridgway and Mr. and Mrs. A. Scott Ebert. They are registered at the Hotel Somerset.

Added in the large Western contingent are Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gilbert of Chicago. They have established a family here for the Summer.

It's the Real New England You'll Find if You Make the Journey,

By CARL ADAMS.

"MARSHFIELD, Brant Rock, Duxbury and Plymouth! All Aboo-o-o-o-oard!"

And say, if you want acquaintance with the quaint; if you want to know what the original sidehook spieler meant when he first barked forth, "Both amusing and instructive"; if you want to know REAL New England on the spot where she was invented; if you want to learn any one of a million things that can't be found out about anywhere else; if you want —but you'd best go down and see them for yourself.

For there's nothing like real, first-hand information about anything. And though I was there—I went and saw and was conquered—why, gee! I just couldn't begin to tell you all the interesting things.

Oh, yes, I'm going to try to, but it isn't because I think I can—it's in the hope of getting you interested enough so you'll go down and use your own eyes, your own ears and experience the same pleasures I did—or maybe more, for it wasn't my first trip and I may be what Nick Young would call "blozza."

Say, There's a Thief Down at Marshfield

JUST what's going to be done about it hadn't been decided at a late hour last night, but Marshfield, where Dan't Webster farmed and went hunting and fishing and where he thought up some of his best splendid periods and so on, is all het up over the discovery that the town has a thief.

Franklin W. Hatch, who is almost as spry as he was when he went to Webster's funeral, and quite as spry as when he drove the mail coach every day between Marshfield and Rockland, put a bundle of laundry out on the back stoop the other day intending to hand it over before the hour to John D. Fiavell, his next door neighbor.

Flavell bought the town livery and coaching business from Mr. Hatch some seven or eight years ago. Between them they know more about horses than the horses know about themselves, and, for all that they traded sixty horses in the gigantic deal, they are still fast friends. Flavell is the local express agent. Forwarding laundry is his specialty.

What the laundry bundle contained is nobody's business, but if it will do anybody any good it may be said that it didn't include stoves, fishing tackle or rubber boots.

However, when Frank Hatch turned around to get the bundle, it was gone.

Vanishing Laundry Trick.

There was quite a to-do about it, let me tell you. They did pretty near everything except ring the bell on the church.

It was two days afterward that Hatch told Flavell about it

"I want stole at all," said John

"What makes you think so?" asked his old friend.

"Why," said John, "the pup saw it out there on the step and brought it over to me, and it's gone straight up to the laundry, according to the directions on the bundle. It ought to be back this evening."

Which it was.

And that led Franklin Hatch to say, in that dry way of his:

"Well, all I've got to say is that 'Queen Bess' English bull pup of yours is the only thief Marshfield has known in my day—and the best express agent since I quit the business."

John Flavell, one of whose ancestors—Thomas—came over to Plymouth in the "Fortune" and the other—Goodwife—in the "Ann," laughed right heartily.

The best fun that regulars among the Marshfield summer folk have is to march the newcomer into Flavell's big barns and hear them say:

"But, Mr. Flavell, what are you going to do when they put a trolley line through here?"

That makes everybody roar.

"They ain't going to," says Flavell, who is considerably over six foot and big in just the right proportions.

"But what if they should?"

"They're not going to."

So, finally, they tell the story, first of how somebody was going to build a track for horse cars and second of the trolley cars, which were actually put down and taken up again.

That was along in the days when every town was preparing to have trolleys, and before it had been demonstrated that a town of 1,800 people, distributed to such a degree that they have seven post offices, was no long for a street railway proposition if it was meant to be anything more than a stock selling scheme.

Marshfield is Famous.

Marshfield is famous, of course, for three or four things besides John Flavell and his wonderful line of conchus. There was Daniel Webster, for instance, and there is Thomas W. Lawson, who comes down in the Fall every year from Egypt, up the coast, and runs the Marshfield Fair. Then there are Green Harbor and Brant Rock, where the Summer is sweet and cool and Summer-goldish, and life is one grand sweet song.

You cannot forget Thomas W Lawson — even if anybody wanted to—and they simply won't let you forget Dan't Webster. Everybody has a story to tell about the great statesman, and how he treated everybody as an equal, and sometimes paid the same bill over again two or three times, and gathered all hands Sunday morning for a little talk, and dreamed of getting together, one day, all the vast estate here that had been taken from a Loyalist who was driven to Newfoundland during the Revolution.

But his name will never die in Marshfield. Flavell has it on one of the barges Governor Winslow's is on another.

The present owner and occupant of the Webster place is Walter Hall, of Hall, Lincoln & Co., the cotton duck people in Milk street. Walter Hall was a Marshfield boy who went up to Boston, accumulated a fortune, and came back to the old home town.

Brant Rock Has the Spice of Life Now

THIS was in the office of the Brant Rock House and there were talking — Billy Baker and Frank Emery—about Footpaugh's circus, which "showed" on a Thursday at Plymouth. Frank had taken a perfect mob down from the beach, fare seventy-five cents.

"And I don't understand it," said Big Frank, who runs the Brant Rock branch of the Flavell stables

"Why for?" asked Billy Baker, Mr. Sumner's day clerk at the Brant Rock.

"Well," said Frank, "there they were the prettiest girls at the beach and why they should leave Brant Rock at this season to go down and see a common, ordinary circus is more than I can understand."

"Don't you remember what Shakespeare said?" asked Billy.

"Never heard him," said Frank, winking one eye at Sumner. "Heard Bryan once and voted for McKinley."

"Blank-spleare," said the day clerk, "observed that variety is the spice of life." Postmaster Walter Peterson, who has no time—and gradually one is moving up the street to Morgan's.

It's directly across the way from the cable office, where they handle every single word of every cablegram that goes from New England to all the mother countries. If you know what I mean, he'll come to that later.

A pretty girl is talking. She is saying—but you want to understand about this very pretty business. It isn't said just to fill up, or to attract interest, or for the sake of saying something. A very pretty girl, you understand, is talking. Not too much red in the cheeks, but just enough, and then two coats of tan and big dark eyes, and hair from a wholesale house, and life and spirit and so on. And, dear, she is pouting. Cuddle up and we'll listen.

"And I think it's just too mean for anything. Everybody had told me about Lover's Lane, and once I saw the play, and last night I read the Courtship of Myles Standish, and I was just in the most romantic mood, and he said we ought to find it, and we turned up that street there and then we came to it, and there was a sign, and it said:

Lovers' Lane.
To the Cove.
DANGEROUS PASSING.

"Really, Dorothy," he said, "I don't think your folks would like it. 'Dangerous passing,' you know."

"That means 'dangerous' going by it, I said, "that's advice to the cove; you're the cove, Hetherington." But he said if we went up a little further we could see Pine Hill, the William J. Wright stock farm. Did ever anyone hear of such a booby?"

"Well," said her friend, "I met the most delightful gentleman to-day who is the ninth generation in direct descent from John Alden, and he is connected with the cable station across the way."

"Oh!" said the pretty one, "well, I'm going to look into this Hetherington boy's genealogy. I shouldn't be surprised if he comes straight down to us from Myles Standish."

They Raise the Limit.

Duxbury is rapidly filling up to her Summer limit. They have to raise this limit every year, too, though the Duxbury Summer habit is handed down from grandma to generation. Normally a town of 2,200, Duxbury in the season cares for from 6,000 to 7,000 They come to Duxbury all the way from St. Louis and Chicago, and they keep coming and bring their friends.

When Commodore William Potter's Duxbury Yacht Club isn't doing something to entertain, and long before you get the Cooky Shop and the Tea Room and the Morgan's habit, you have to learn all there is to know about the cable office.

They are very nice about it in the cable office, though some of the younger men do wish that all the girls wouldn't ask them to point out Charles Alden, and would Mr. Alden kindly state his views on the subject and what would he have done under the circumstances?

It is rather a bore to Mr. Charles Alden, don't you understand, for he's an athletic gentleman in the very early 40's now and ROMANCE isn't quite what it used to be, and he isn't half as strong for POETRY as he is for steak and onions and he can understand the click-click of the wire whether it speaks Continental or talks United States "Morse."

Some folks who come to the Cable station, really want to talk on about the cable however, and they are intelligent questions, and they learn some things that amuse them.

For instance, when you file a cable despatch in Boston, by the Western Union, it doesn't go straight under the water to London or Paris.

Duxbury gives it to Heart's Content, 1,900 miles away on the northeast coast of Newfoundland. Heart's Content passes it on to the station at Valencia, on the coast of Ireland, a stretch of 1,800 miles, and Valencia passes it along to London.

They work fifteen men at the cable station, Robert J. Needham, the superintendent in charge for the Anglo-American Cable Company, and Fred D. Byrne, the manager for the Western Union. The cable people ends two miles out at Rouse's Hummock, north from Gurnet Light.

Yes, but it's So Different!

Like the rest of these South Shore towns, the Duxbury of long ago would hardly be recognized in the Duxbury of to-day. The old Duxbury was a great town for manufactures and shipbuilding. Duxbury ships fifty years ago were known around the world. At one time a dozen shipyards were busy. To-day Duxbury is Duxbury the Summer resort, with a little farming on the side. There are five villages, including Tarkiln, which perhaps gets its name from the kiln of Revolutionary days, and Tinkertown. Why "Tinkertown?"

At Tarkiln was the "Tree of Knowledge," so called, it may be, because in olden times the people used it as a mail box, the stage coach stopping there daily to pick up and forward letters.

Duxbury's Summer life opens about the time the school season closes. Out at Powder Point is an academy for boys from ten to eighteen years old. Some years ago it was "Knapp's School." Now it is Powder Point Academy.

You doubtless have heard of the Powder Point Hotel. That's it. When the powder stores leave for home Powder Point Academy becomes the Powder Point House

Like Cohasset, and quite like Rinaconet down at Nantucket, Duxbury keeps out the common herd—find it numbers in its colony the best people of the stage. Here is the famous place of the demented Fanny Davenport, and here, too, Clinton Towers, the home of William Seymour, her brother-in-law.

Seymour, still with Frohman, is back for the Summer When some of the young folks asked him about it the other day, he said:

"I called the place 'Clinton Towers' because, as Shakespeare said, there are no clams near it and no towers. It is very simple, when you understand."

And here with a suggestion. When you see "Duxbury" on a letter, believe it. There are no "Duxburys" clams any more When anybody horsehouts is fortunate enough to find a Duxbury clam the Duxbury clam remains in Duxbury.

By the way, "Commodore William Potter," of the Duxbury Yacht Club. You may not have recognized him. Suppose we write it "Dr. William H. Potter, the celebrated dentist of Arlington street." Ah! Well, we sure need the Duxbury Yacht Club. If it wasn't for these races on Saturday at high tides—that expressive "at high tide" means what it says, here, most peculiarly and most particularly—if it wasn't for the yacht club races and the yacht club Saturday night dances, Summer life in Duxbury would never be quite the same.

For Saturdays, anyhow, Commodore Potter is on active sea duty, and all hands are on deck, or words to that effect.

But shouldn't you think the Selectmen would change the text of that signboard just beyond Charles Alden's, at the entrance to Lover's Lane?

There Are Real Girls Down "Duxbury Way"

IT was afternoon, and it was Main street, Duxbury, which runs along the shore of Duxbury Bay, and all the girls were up in Morgan's for college tea.

Dropping in at Morgan's at this time of day is quite the proper thing. First you go to the Cooky Shop—isn't that just too sweet?—and then you have to drop in and see Mrs. Hollis at the Tea Room—dear Mrs. Hollis, we have had one this long time, and we are two of the best friends on earth —or is it four of the best friends?—but this is the silly season, as nobody will deny, and a youth from the Boston High School of Commerce got this up the other day, seated on one of the broad piazzas of the Hotel Pilgrim, overlooking Plymouth Bay, two and a half miles from town, and how the whole town is at it.

Chief Giedhill was asked about it.

He couldn't say "G'wan," him being a retired schoolmaster, so he said "Beat it!" in a firm but pleasing voice.

Captain Robbins was approached.

"Parade dismissed," he said.

Problems Easy for Him.

The young man with the bulging brow up at the Hotel Pilgrim wants to come down to the Samoset with his old problems They've got a boy behind the desk at the Samoset who can answer questions before you ask them. His name is Jack Wheeler and he is ready at all times to tackle questions.

Man came up to the desk yesterday and says:

"Hi, Jack."

"Lo," says Jack.

"Jack," says the man, "where'll I find Frank McHugh?"

"Cooper Drug Company," says Jack, at the same time handing a grip over the desk to a lady from Philadelphia, saving a child from falling down stairs, removing a bit of thread from the shoulder of Proprietor Bill Douglas and calling for one-a-those-over-there cabs.

"Where's their store?" asks the man

"They've got two," says Mr. Wheeler, "Shirley Square and Town Square"

"That makes a riddle out of it," says the guest, "in which one will I find Frank McHugh?"

"He goes from one to the other," said the Samoset clerk, "but it's a cinch finding him. Note to which shop all the pretty girls in town seem to be heading."

Wasn't that nice of him? And wouldn't you rather be Frank McHugh than Elder Brewster or Myles Standish, or Chief Giedhill, or Plymouth Cordage, or any of those other heroes of history? Well, I should say so!

Still, there are other young men in Plymouth this morning quite as popular as Mr. McHugh. No? Well, how about Tom Vaigus, our puzzling pitcher? How about George Crook, who takes them off behind the bat? How about Captain "Wib" Ford?

The Plymouths have been mowing them down this season like machinery in the ball field. No semi-professional nine in New England has been treated half so badly as this at the hands of Treasurer Gideon F. Holmes of the Plymouth Cordage Company.

Play Ball! Plymouth!

This is the largest rope mill in all the world, employing not less than 1,400 hands, and yet it isn't too big to set off ball grounds for the boys and to show its interest in them every which way.

The Summer season has been to hit Plymouth as it strikes all the other towns and, it won't be long before hotel men greet you with that happy, confident, indefinable manner which says the house is full, but we might put a cot in with another bed in 46. They'll all be here

Learning Rules the Police of Plymouth

AS the only civilized community on the face of the earth having a schoolmaster for the chief of police, Plymouth offers a problem.

Chief Giedhill is the second lieutenant of Company D of the Fifth Regiment, M. V. M.

The commander of said company is Captain Charles Rollins. In plain clothes Captain Rollins is a foreman in the Mebbett woolen mills.

Comes now the problem:

Could Second Lieutenant Giedhill place Captain Robbins?

Could Captain Robbins stroll up to Chief Giedhill in the street and command him to fall in?

Nothing of the kind is likely to happen, for the Captain and the Chief and the Second Lieutenant and the worried fore-

SOCIETY AT THE BEACH RESORTS

Many Guests at the Summer Homes of Cohasset This Season.

It is generally conceded that the yachting centre of Massachusetts is along the North Shore, where so many clubs and societies have their headquarters. That may be true from a professional standpoint, but there are few yachtsmen, whose fondness for the sport exceed that of many of the owners of cracks sloops along the South Shore. Here it is a part of the everyday life, not a pastime for a few afternoons during the week. Several of the yachtsmen make the journey back and forth to town each day in their craft.

Most notable of all is William B. Sears of Cohasset, who makes the trip each day, unless a strenuous northeast storm interferes. Even that sometimes fails to dampen his ardor, for last year the natty little power boat, Ruth, in which he makes the journey, failed to start but once and went in safety to Hingham. Another yachtsman who is ashore on Nantasket in only the heaviest weather does Mr. Sears make his daily trip. Mr. Sears' craft is a handsome affair, being built on the lines of a Gloucester fishing boat, but noteworthy indeed are the fittings, which are of mahogany. She looks extremely well and goes through the water at a fine clip, as her owner can testify.

Never on one of the Brewsters is the Summer villa of Mr. and Mrs. B. P. Cheney of Boston, whether the latter be in the more exclusive society, and their shore home is one of the most attractive in all the Brewsters in directly fronting the ocean. In fact there is no way of reaching it but by coasting it but by coasting to town a most every day, and Mrs. Cheney does not miss the trip. Mr. Cheney is the owner of the handsome steam yacht Mr. Cheney, which is a frequent visitor to the Cohasset waters. Mrs. Cheney is another of Boston's yachtswomen, and has a handsome sailing craft, which she handles with the skill of an old hand at the business. Mrs. Lawson is not far behind Mrs. Cheney in her love for the water, and can be seen at the helm of her handsome craft on almost any pleasant day. She has a handsome summer home on the Brewsters, and has built it so as to be comfortable on all occasions.

Send Willie Back to School

By Herbert Kaufman

—[Copyright, 1910, by Herbert Kaufman

Willie wants to work. For the past month he has eloquently, sullenly, steadfastly, sophistically, earnestly argued why he must quit school.

He insists that he already knows enough. He yearns to earn instead of learn. With a brave show of self-sacrifice, he proclaims that you have more than done your duty. In tones of voluntary martyrdom, he declares his intention to assume his share of life's responsibilities.

He has heard the call of ambition, urging him to carve his own way—to surge onward—to mount without additional guidance.

He has burst through his chrysalis of dependence—his wings are aching to flap in flight.

His present education is far beyond yours when you became captain of your career. He is setting forth with more years to his credit and is determined to prove a credit to you.

Avaunt, idle hours! Away with pampering paternalism! Farewell to soft theory! Now is the time to become practical—to plunge into the human vortex—to wrest from the rest—to take his knocks and take lesson from them, etc., etc., etc.

And you, with a fine show of sternness, have frowned and orated and lost your temper and fumed and stormed—you have peremptorily denied his demands. And all the while, a sneaking glow of fool's pride has warmed your heart to think that YOUR boy volunteers to share your burdens instead of your income.

You visualize a second Marshall Field or Edison, and inside of a fortnight you'll capitulate and casually stop at Brown's table, discuss crops, weather, tariff, baseball, the market, and incidentally refer to that "headstrong cub of yours who simply won't listen to reason (very much to your disappointment) but, ahem! fine young fellow—stalwart, eager type—you know the sort," etc., etc., etc.

If truth be known, however, Willie doesn't know enough to know he doesn't know enough. If he had sufficient brains to get along with a half-trained mind, he'd be clever enough to realize that he needs all the education he can acquire.

He isn't old enough to have real sense. His foresight has never gotten past his nose-tip. He's merely a callow youth with a fallow judgment—experience has never plowed his mind—observation has never furrowed his brow.

Spending money is, more than likely, another root of trouble.

He hears the call of the theater, and sees the lights of the cafe district. The blood of Ancestor Esau is urging him to swap his future for more musical comedy—more suits with four-inch pant cuffs and a more regular supply of Turkish death-sticks.

Give him full rein today and before many days he will wear the permanent check-rein of handicapped incompetency.

You forget that things have been happening at the rate of a year an hour since you threw away your text-books. You overlook the modern pace. You confuse the mental requirements of forty years ago with those of 1910.

It doesn't occur to you that more men graduated from colleges this spring than were turned out of academies in 1877-8-9—that we are quite used to university men in business—that there is so much available material wearing A. B. and B. S. tags, that we regard men of your degree of culture as almost illiterate.

If Willie doesn't keep on with his books, he'll be lucky if he gets a better post than bookkeeping.

He must meet a different competition than you faced. We're traveling at a faster gait, and the ticket that admitted you to opportunity won't pass him through the same gate. We're raising our standard every year because education is raising a better standard of men for us.

We haven't changed in our theory that action is far more important than information, BUT since we CAN afford them in our shops, in our factories, and in our offices, we naturally choose the man with the trained brain AND the force to put his information into action.

HOW ABOUT THE THIEF MAKER!

Copyright, 1910, by the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner

IN the matter of the people of the United States against the Sugar Trust a few little gentlemen were arrested and tried and sent to prison. It was all beautifully prompt and business-like, as it should have been.

The man who steals, whether he steals for himself or his employer, deserves to be punished.

It seems probable that in the Sugar Trust case the prosecutors put in jail everybody they could put in jail. But the men most deserving of going there didn't go. And there lies the danger to public honesty in the present organization of criminal corporations.

Down in the ranks are numbers of little fellows who are employed for the dirty work—the stealing. They do not want to steal, and they are not particularly well paid for stealing; but they DO WANT TO LIVE, and they know that unless they steal their jobs will not last very long.

A little higher up is another set of men, whose business it is to see that the little thieves steal intelligently and with the least possible danger of detection.

A little higher still are the officers and directors of the institution, the real beneficiaries of all the stealings, but so complicated and ingenious is the machinery of dishonesty that it is practically impossible to connect them in any way with the thefts or to inflict upon them any punishment severer than a fine, which is no punishment at all.

Now, bad as are the crooked little pilferers who are so easily sent to jail, a million times worse are the fat and prosperous men for whose interests they are sent there.

You may not excuse a man who steals to pay off a mortgage on his home, but you can at least understand his temptation. But for the man who hires other men to do the crooked work he does not dare do there is no temptation save the temptation to gain illegal power.

Long before he begins to hire men to steal for him he is past the reach of hunger, past the danger of want.

There is no mortgage on his home, no surly company of collectors nagging his wife for money on the last month's bills.

As far as his actual needs go he is prosperous.

But in order to glut his appetite he must have more money than he needs, and to get it willing to corrupt and debauch any man who will steal for him, from the United States Senator down to the dock hand who will doctor cheating scales.

There is punishment for the Man Who Does the Actual Stealing, but the Object of Punishment Is the Man Who Makes Thieves.

By all means let there be a law to punish the miserable creatures who yield to this man's blandishments, but also by all means let there be a law to punish still more severely the man himself.

Daily we read of corruption in boards of aldermen, in State legislatures, in Congress, and we marvel that men can be so cheap as to sell themselves and their souls for a few paltry dollars.

However, as things are at present it is comparatively easy to capture and punish the bribetaker, and quite impossible either to capture or to punish the bribegiver.

The thing to be done is to stop bribery altogether. And the way to do it is to so arrange things that there shall be no bribegiving, no temptation to steal, no cowardly company of fat corporation thieves getting rich out of the dishonesty they have created in other men.

In this Sugar Trust affair it was discovered that the scales had been doctored and the accounts falsified by a handful of small employes, paid a little more than the honest employes of the corporation, but by no means in proportion to the profits their dishonesty made for their employers.

Just put yourself in the place of one of these men, if you can.

You have a position, which you have secured with difficulty, and which brings you in just enough to support your family. You know no other business. To get out of a job means that your children must go hungry till you can find another. You know that it may be many weeks before you can secure even the most poorly paid employment outside the sugar docks.

Presently a man comes to you secretly and tells you that by cheating a little for the company you can get better pay.

You do not want to cheat, and say so. He tells you that if you do not cheat you can go look for another job.

With this cheerful information to think upon you return to your home. The children are well fed and happy. Naturally you want to keep them happy. You cannot bear to think of the time when you must come home with no money for bread for them.

After a few sleepless nights you decide that you owe more to the children than you do to your conscience. And you return to the docks willing to cheat, and continue to cheat till some keen-eyed detective catches you at it and sends you to the penitentiary.

In your prison you will have no reason to justify or excuse yourself. You should have taken a chance on another job rather than steal for anybody. But infinitely worse than you is the man who devised the system that made you a thief, and your opinion of the justice that puts you in jail and sends him for a Summer cruise on a luxurious yacht will not be very high.

The lobbyists whose trade it is to corrupt legislatures for thieving organizations of capital make a specialty of knowing the exact financial condition of every man in the Legislature.

If Smith has a mortgage on his home that he cannot pay off, the lobbyist finds it out. He makes Smith's acquaintance and gives him to understand that if he votes "the right way" he need have no further worry about the mortgage.

Perhaps Smith prefers to be honest. Perhaps he came to the Legislature with the idea of serving his constituents to the best of his ability and resisting every effort to corrupt him.

But to the poor man struggling for existence a mortgage on his home looks big. He considers the proposition from all sides. It may apparently be a very small thing that he is asked to do. No one will know how he came to vote "the right way."

At last he gives up and does vote that way, and once in the grip of the lobbyist he is his tool forever.

If there were a law that would send that bribegiver to the penitentiary and give the bribetaker immunity for telling of the transaction, legislative and Congressional bribery would stop instantly.

However badly the crooks who debauch legislatures want laws, they never want them badly enough to go to jail to get them.

No lobbyist would ever consent to traffic in human honesty if, on the evidence of one of his intended victims, he could be put to breaking rocks for five or ten years.

It is reasonable to assume that all men PREFER to be honest. Most of them are honest by nature; the remainder are too cowardly to steal if they can make their living any other way.

This being the case, honesty would be natural and expected in legislative bodies—WERE IT NOT FOR THE EXPENSIVE MACHINERY MAINTAINED BY CROOKED INTERESTS SIMPLY FOR THE PURPOSE OF MANUFACTURING THIEVES.

What parent, however implicitly he trusts his son, would care to have him exposed to a constant nagging temptation to do wrong?

What company of voters, however much confidence they may have in the man representing them in the United States Senate, would feel that he was guarding their interests if they discovered him to be in frequent correspondence with Mr. John D. Archbold, of the Standard Oil?

Thieving is bad and dangerous business.

Making thieves is equally bad business, but just at present it is pretty safe.

Enact a law punishing the bribegiver, who is the thiefmaker, and whose system is responsible for three-quarters of all official corruption, and you will go a long way toward enacting honesty into law.

Killing a few individual mosquitoes will never rid a city of the pest. But when men go to the marshes and swamps where the mosquitoes are bred and destroy the stagnant ponds that give them life they can sit outdoors in peace for the rest of the Summer.

Put the bribetaker in jail and another bribetaker takes his place, and the work of public rascality goes on.

But put the bribegiver in jail, and not only do you stop the rascality that he has been encouraging, but you frighten other bribegivers into an unwilling but useful honesty.

FROZEN DAINTIES DESCRIBED BY MRS. LINCOLN

FROZEN dainties make the best dessert after all this time of the year when the members of the family begin to crave food so much as the desire to be cool and comfortable.

The essential points in freezing cream are to have the right proportion of ice to use the right proportion of coarse rock salt, and beat, beat, beat the cream during the freezing.

The finer the ice is crushed the quicker it melts and the colder the ice melts the faster the cream freezes, and this means the less time it takes. Not merely because the cream freezes faster, but because faster freezing means smaller crystals of ice.

The finer the salt is crushed the more ice it will melt and the colder the ice will be. Therefore, the finer the salt is crushed the quicker the cream will freeze.

Many housekeepers who have had the entire freezing of the cream done by machine will not be equipped to do the work by crank turning. To prepare cream for freezing by hand, put the cream in the dasher of the freezer, and put in this dasher a box with the coarse ice and salt in proportion of three parts ice to one part salt.

See that the can is clean and the bearings and socket in the top are well oiled, and that the rod and paddle are properly adjusted, before putting in the cream. Then put on the cover, being careful not to jar the cream. Then set out of the way, where it will not be disturbed, either when the cream is being frozen or when it is packing.

Allow from fifteen minutes to half an hour for freezing, according to the amount of cream to be frozen. Turn the crank rapidly for the first three minutes, then more slowly for about twenty minutes, or until the cream has reached the consistency desired.

Remove the dasher, scrape the cream down from the sides, and push it to the bottom of the can. Then put on the cover, and repack the freezer with ice and salt, using the same proportions as at the beginning. Cover the freezer with several thicknesses of newspaper, and set away to ripen for two hours.

Some Frozen Deserts.

Some excellent frozen desserts have been presented by Mrs. Mary J. Lincoln, author of the Boston Cook Book, the Wellesley College Recipes and other well-known cook books.

Some selected ones are:

Water Ices Made With the Acid Juices—The simplest water ices are made with water, sugar and the acid juices of kinds of fruit just mentioned. Lemonade or with unclouded fruit juices answering a portion of water, sweetened and flavored, all combinations of fresh fruit juices are most delicious. Combining the juice of the mashed fruit keeps to drive out the juice from the fruit, and then adding starts the juice in grapes and the juice from pineapple, orange, lemon, water cover is necessary to preserve the flavor and other hard or delicate fruits.

Berry and Other Ices—To one quart of berries, currants, cherries, peaches, or other fruit, add one pint of sugar and one pint of cold water, or less if stronger fruit flavor is desired. Stir the sugar and water, and add some sugar if needed. Mash the fruit, and add the water. Let stand for one hour, then strain through a fine sieve, and freeze as directed. Use a quart of fruit juice to one pint of sugar and one pint of water. Mix and freeze as directed. Use one cup of sugar to one cup of water, and one cup of fruit juice

A SUMMER SHOW---By James J. Montague.

I WROTE a comic opera, a lightsome, gladsome thing,
With seven hundred girls to see, and seven girls to sing.
It lacked a lot of sense and plot, but all my friends agreed
That it was just the kind of stuff the people really need.
And so I found a manager, and when he'd heard the skit
He said that it could hardly fail to make a great big hit.
"Of course," he added, "I'll suggest a trifling change or two,
A thing, as you perhaps may know, producers often do."

"THAT song about the Sunshade Kid is just a bit too slow,
I'll have that written over by a stage hand that I know.
The Twilight Moon may be all right, but what's it all about?
The Lobster Dance is very nice, but—well, we'll cut it out.
The dialogue is bright and crisp, but don't you think it drags?
Let's borrow some old almanac and get some good, strong gags.
That garden scene is rather good, but we will alter that,
Because we'll get more action in a fifth [illegible] Chelsea flat!"

AND so he took my opera and made a change or two.
He took my lightsome music out and put in tunes he knew.
He changed the names of characters, he changed each scene and line,
He changed the plot, he changed the name, and everything of mine.
He added twenty characters and cut out twenty-three,
And threw in vaudevillian stunts without consulting me;
And when I asked for an advance he calmly said: "Go'way,
You've got to pay me royalties, because I wrote the play."

I OWN I hoped that it would fail; fall down both hard and flat.
I felt that it was doomed to fail, but I was wrong at that.
It scored three hundred curtain calls upon the opening night,
And every day the ticket sharks sell everything in sight.
The songs are all around the town, three shows are on the road;
The profits go to bank by van and truck and wagon load.

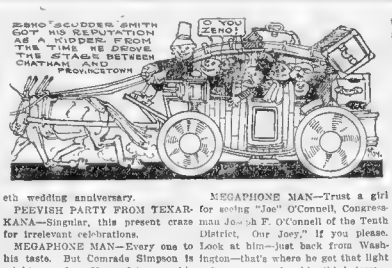
THE BOSTON MEGAPHONE MAN AT FIELD'S CORNER

FIELD'S CORNER, Dorchester. Time, 5 p. m., any day. "Business" is at a standstill. Not a customer is in sight. Not a thing doing to and fro. Robert Beck, Wm. Rudolph and Wm. Bowden are dismount[illegible]



ZENO SCUDDER SMITH GOT HIS REPUTATION AS A RIDER FROM THE TIME HE DROVE THE STAGE BETWEEN CHATHAM AND PROVINCETOWN

along Dorchester avenue and draws up alongside R. H. Billings's drug store. Megaphone Man [illegible] them education, as it were.

N. E. A. TEACHER—Near Savin Hill?

MEGAPHONE MAN—[illegible] is Field's Corner Square, which is one end of Field's Corner. The other end is at Field's Corner Transfer Station, which is perceived a few rods up the avenue.

INQUISITIVE PERSON FROM CO[illegible]

HOH[illegible] was Hecla, a person or a position?

MEGAPHONE MAN—You can search me.

CUTE INDIVIDUAL FROM SHAWOKIN, PA—Maybe he was Elysian Fields.

MEGAPHONE MAN—No, he's an imported wit. There's only one man at Field's Corner allowed to deal repartee like that, and he is Zeno Scudder Smith. And, speaking of Zeno, there he is across the street, that plump gentleman with the elderly mustache and the youthful smile. Zeno is in the real estate and insurance business on Dorchester avenue and is the Field's Corner wit on the side. Zeno is a Cape Cod product. He was named for the late United States Senator Zeno Scudder. In his boyhood he drove the old stage coach from Chatham to Provincetown. He obtained his facility at repartee in exchanging thoughts with the stage travelers. When it comes to bon-mots, Zeno fills the berry basket.

DAMSEL FROM DAMARISCOTTA—How odd!

MEGAPHONE MAN—What's odd, that Zeno Scudder Smith is witty?

D. FROM D.—No; I refer to that little building alone by itself.

MEGAPHONE MAN—Oh, yes; that is the Flatiron Building.

NEW YORKER—Huh!

MEGAPHONE MAN—Even so. While it has not the wind-blowing, skirt-raising reputation of the New York building of the same name, yet it's modest little structure at the junction of Dorchester avenue and Freeport street in the outward sign of [illegible] and a burning controversy. It is owned by the Robinson estate, which wished the city to buy the triangular corner of land in front of the drug store. The city balked at the price. The owners then erected this little building four years ago and threw yonder rail-fence along to cut off the intervening space from traffic. But let us to more harmonious topics. We are now in the birthplace of American education, as it were.

N. E. A. TEACHER—Near Savin Hill?

MEGAPHONE MAN—Correct, madam; yonder hill is Savin Hill. There was the first settlement of Dorchester. There the first American school was built—the original Little Red Schoolhouse, so to speak. Dorchester avenue itself is one of the oldest roads in the city. It was known as "the lower road," in distinction to Washington street, or the "upper road," over Mt. Bowdoin way.

PEEVISH PARTY FROM TEXARKANA—Everything is so durned old in this burg.

MEGAPHONE MAN—Oh, I don't know. There's going to be a new railroad crossing at Dorchester avenue. See, they are working at it now, abolishing the grade. They are going to elevate the tracks and depress the street. At present the residents are much depressed. They can't sleep. The abolition work is going on at night. The racket keeps people awake. But it's all for the good of the cause, as the suffragette said when she stuck a hat-pin into the Prime Minister.

INQUISITIVE PERSON FROM COHOES—Who is that youngish man across the way?

MEGAPHONE MAN—That is Charles T. Simpson, and you can take it from me that Mr. Simpson will not be displeased at your description. Yet he is a Civil War veteran and has recently celebrated his thirtieth wedding anniversary.

PEEVISH PARTY FROM TEXARKANA—Singular, this present craze for irrelevant celebrations.

MEGAPHONE MAN—Every one to his taste. But Comrade Simpson is mighty popular. He used to wear his beard long and his mustache flowing But, when he was made a grandfather recently the boys jollied him about getting along in years. They do say that, by strange coincidence, Comrade Simpson had his beard cut to goatee pattern and his moustachios clipped trimly, making him look ten years younger.

WOMAN TOURIST (audibly)—What a well-dressed man, that one who just passed.

MEGAPHONE MAN—That's what they all say, even the little ones, when they see "Ben" Hunt, or Benjamin H. Hunt, Jr., to be formal. Mr. Hunt is a newsdealer and Past Commander of the Sons of Veterans. He is, or was, keen on politics. He ran for the Republican nomination for the old Common Council sundry times. But he didn't run fast enough. About three years ago he apparently gave it up. But he may be heard from again.

DARK-EYED GIRL FROM NEW ORLEANS—There's a nice-looking man there in the light suit.

MEGAPHONE MAN—Trust a girl for seeing "Joe" O'Connell, Congressman Joseph F. O'Connell of the Tenth District, Our Joey," if you please. Look at him—just back from Washington—that's where he get that light suit—now out for his third term—going to get married this Fall—head of the "Red Devil" Democracy—and ready to meet all comers in the campaign from "Jim" Curley onward. He's going up to the law offices he shares with Brother "Jim" and Brother Don in the Field's Building.

NEW YORKER—Say, I know about him—he's the man who has been proffered a "purity and peace" campaign by the opposition.

MEGAPHONE MAN—Yep, that's the idea. But don't lay too strong on that "peace" proposition. This is the "Fighting Tenth," y'know.

DARK-EYES—Well, I hope he wins

MEGAPHONE MAN—So does Joe. Ah, there's Superintendent Wendell Jones of Field's Corner postoffice who has been on the job here since August 1, 1882. Strictly speaking, he is Superintendent of the branch office of Field's Corner. But he is "Postmaster Jones" to all

NEW YORKER (in argument with Texarkana man)—Aw, nobody knew how the fight was coming out.

MEGAPHONE MAN—Don't tell that to Charley Lindstrom. That's Charley going into his hardware store there. He said all along that Jeffries could never come back. He can now say "I told you so" to the other dopesters. Charley used to be quite a boxer himself in the early days up in that dear old Manchester, N. H. No, he doesn't box now. He says that he was knocked out once in a stiff amateur bout and he never boxed again. But he follows the boxing game close.

NEW YORKER—Say, any more sports in this spot?

MEGAPHONE MAN—See that chap with the white Kelly and the green vest, driving the stepper?

NEW YORKER—Could I [illegible] that hat and vest in a mile.

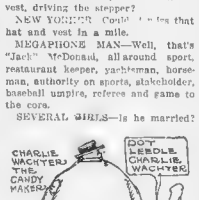
SEVERAL GIRLS—Is he married?



MEGAPHONE MAN—He certainly is. Ask him why he named his new motor launch the "Ethel M." He'll color up a bit and say: "Well, that's my wife's name, you know." That horse is Rosemont, the 2:20 pacer. "Jack" has offered $400 for "Kelly," the fastest horse in the Springfield Driving Club, but "Kelly's" owner won't listen to it. No, "Jack" doesn't spend all his time in amusement. He has built up a corking good restaurant trade and doesn't neglect it.

GENT FROM DETROIT—They race horses here, do they?

MEGAPHONE MAN—Rather do it [illegible] out. Why, the Dorchester Gentleman's Driving Club is one of the classiest organizations of its kind in the country. And there's the president of it sitting in his real estate office right across the street—yes, A. M. Johnson, the same. He is making a fight to have the city extend the Franklin Field speedway another quarter-mile, so they can have full mile brushes. He owns Kremulla, a recent purchase.

INGENUE FROM INGHAM, IA.—Is he president because he has the fastest horse?

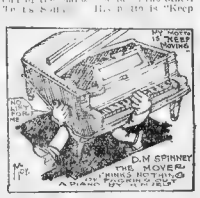
MEGAPHONE MAN—Not yet. The fastest trotter in the Dorchester Gentleman's Driving Club is Patrick O'Hearn's Carl C. And, speaking of Patrick O'Hearn, you are discussing a man who has literally done more to build up Field's Corner of late years than any other one person.

SHAMOKIN CUTEY AT LAST AGAIN—He [illegible] the [illegible] builder.

MEGAPHONE MAN—Quite so. He is in the business. And he's made money at it. They call him the richest man around Field's Corner. He owns houses and blocks and his [illegible] building more all the time. He is democratic, though. You are likely to see him around any time in his shirtsleeves, talking with one of his contractors or hossing a job. He is married and is raising a fine, big family, too.

NEW YORKER—About the biggest man in the district, hey?

MEGAPHONE MAN—Financially, yes. But, physically speaking, few of them have anything on Charley Wachter, the candy maker. As his name indicates, he is a Teuton. Also, he weighs about 250 pounds. A substantial citizen is [illegible] Charley Wachter," in more senses than one.



INQUISITIVE MAN FROM COHOES—Do you happen to know who is the tallest man in Field's Corner?

MEGAPHONE MAN—I got you. The tallest man in Field's Corner is John Maloney, over on Gessner street, six feet [illegible] Next!

NEW YORKER—Any strong men heredoints?

MEGAPHONE MAN—D. M. Spinney, the mover, qualifies. He is not a professional strong man. But he's there with the muscle, however. When he moves a piano he brings along two of his men. They take one end of the piano in [illegible] the other. The [illegible] Don't go to "Keep Off the Grass" [illegible] That is good for his business.

NEW YORKER—There goes a wise-looking guy.

MEGAPHONE MAN—He's wise, he's wise. He is "Jim" Henderson. He's first vice-president of the Republican City Committee and that takes wisdom. He has just opened a real estate office with Frank Ross. And the real estate business takes wisdom nowadays. No, he is not married. But he's wise. He's going to be married this Fall. Between politics, his business and his prospective marriage "Jim's" friends figure he is about mapped out for life now.

CHILD—Ma, what's that man telling those conductors what to do?

MEGAPHONE MAN—Observing boy, madam. Will probably grow up to be a successful census taker. The man he refers to is none other than Frank Wilkins, superintendent of Division Three of the Boston Elevated, with headquarters at Field's Corner car barn. He has charge of Field's Corner, Milton and Neponset branches, and so has his hands full, especially in Winter. But he keeps things going. That's what he's here for. He is quick and snappy and is always chasing around his district in a light hitch or on a car. If the trolley wheels aren't always turning round Frank has to be shown.

N. E. A. TEACHER—Who is that professional-appearing man, a teacher?

MEGAPHONE MAN—A fair guess, madam, but not quite. He is a physician. He is Dr. Charles P. Maina. His diversion is playing baseball. You see, in college he was a pitcher with three different curves. He has never forgotten his diamond days. Even now he will go up to Town Field and play ball with the boys. He says it helps to keep him in condition. But he doesn't get much chance for recreation. Doctors are busy men. And now, ladies and gentlemen, if you will follow me we will go up to Mt. Ida, whence one obtains a fair view of the Dorchester district. (Exeunt up Adams street).

FUNNY THINGS THE CHILDREN SAY

A SMALL boy, whose father (a strong Democrat) prior to the last Presidential election bought a pair of donkeys to advertise his party, came home from Sunday school and announced that Jesus was a Democrat. Upon being asked why he thought so he said:

"You never heard of his riding on an elephant—he always rode a donkey."

A FRIEND of mine called to see me one afternoon, bringing her ten-year-old nephew with her. I have a sister of the same age, and I told her to take him out in the back yard to play. They played together for some time until I heard the boy say:

"If I were to kiss you, would you tell your mother?"

"No," said my sister, "you don't want to kiss the whole family, do you?"

"I'VE been to the matinee," said Ethel. "Why don't you ever go?"

"Mamma says I'm too young to go," was the reply. "I'm only seven and she says I can't go until I'm eight."

"But," said Ethel, "you may die before that and then you're stung."

A YOUNG girl went to visit some friends and was told by her mother that if she were asked for supper she should say: "No, thank you. I have already dined." When she was about to leave they asked her if she would not stay and have a bite, and she said:

"No, thank you; I have already bitten."

"Mary Jane," she was saying as she plunged one doll into the water, "I baptize you in the name of the Father, the Son, and into the hole you go."

OUR boy Leon had received a sharp reprimand from his mother for some of the thoughtless, noisy pranks which usually characterize the wide-awake boy. He is so alert to everything going on that he has to be "called down" very often. He usually is a good natured about it, but on this occasion his face assumed a worried expression, and he spoke out quite feelingly:

"Oh, dear, I wish I was married, so I would not have to be scolded so much."

WHILE visiting my niece in the country we were walking toward the garden when I remarked that there were a lot of mosquitoes.

"Yes," she said. "One bit me on the shoulder last night and I slapped it and made its face bleed."

WE were recently in a cemetery looking over the various monuments and reading the names on them. I read the names of John Jones and John James. Our little daughter, who is much interested in her Sunday school, looked up and very seriously asked:

"Well, mamma, where is [illegible] Baptist buried?"

THREE-YEAR-OLD Margaret, seeing that her two little kittens (one day old) did not open their eyes, began to open them with her fingers. Her mother seeing her, said:

"Margaret, what are you doing to the kittens?"

"God forgot to open their eyes," she answered, "so I am doing it."

ONE day Helen, aged four, stood watching her mother showing her baby sister its image in the mirror. Not long after this incident her uncle visited her from Chicago.

"Come Helen," said he, "I'll give you ten pennies for that baby."

Helen thought for a moment, and then answered:

"No-o! Not that baby, but you give me the one in the mirror for

WHAT I DID YESTERDAY—ON MY SATURDAY AFTERNOON OFF.

DRAWN BY NELL BRINKLEY

FOR my Saturday afternoon off, it was a matinee yesterday, silly certainly in PERFECT. At times the stage was a glimpse of Fairyland, sprinkled thick with real, LIVE fairies, pretty, sweet, graceful, slender-limbed fairies, fairies with roguish eyes, and fairies with smiles that invited you to come right up and play "kissing games"—but Billy never seemed to notice them AT ALL. His eyes told me that not one of these stage fairies could compare with me for all-around loveliness. And he whispered things in my ear every minute that I wouldn't tell you for WORLDS. Actually, I don't believe Billy realized that we were at a stage show at all. Tell me, now, how many men would be so DARLING as that, at a theatre, with a stage full of fairies? Well, this settles it. You couldn't PRY me away from Billy.

ONE EVENING OF LIFE WITH VISITORS IN THE PUBLIC GARDENS

"NAY, nay, Pauline," said the rarely self-asserting Mr. Henpeck the other night in quick retort to the proposal of the mistress of his domicile that they take the children off for a car ride. "It's the Public Gardens for ours, for the wages are low and the living cost high. The free fresh it will be tonight."

And so the Henpeck family bled them off to the Public Gardens, hubby shoving the baby carriage and mother leading the little tots by the hand, while the older Henpecks straggled along in the rear.

In the Public Gardens they took up a bench and a half, which they got by coming early on the scene. Next them they found their next door neighbors, the Dingbat family. Together the two representatives of the anti-race suicide theory passed four soothing hours, and then slowly returned to their homes to eke out a night of doubtful rest in their stuffy sleeping rooms.

The day after Henpeck and Dingbat talked it over, and they voted the Public Gardens the right place for a man of family to spend his evenings. Dingbat's girl, who is a miss of sweet sixteen, and Henpeck's eldest boy, who expects to be in the voting list this Fall, voiced the opinion of their sires. While a crescent moon was struggling to get its thin rays through the foliage of a huge catawba tree, the young Henpeck made ardent love to Miss Dingbat. It was certainly a jolly place, that Public Garden, just the right spot for spooning in the half shade.

Of course, there are thousands of others just like the Henpecks and the Dingbats who enjoy the free fresh air and the natural and artificial beauties of the Public Gardens nightly. And they don't all come from Martin Lomasney's ward. They really come from all over, for, you know, the gardens are a famous spot, and attractive as well.

With this little preamble, just to get the gossipy feeling, as it were, we will start in on the real story of the evening's events.

Before 8 o'clock the rush is on. All avenues into the gardens are thronged with the incoming legions. It is a case of first come, first served, and the early ones get the choice seats. Others take up the less desirable places. The fag ends go to still later comers. By 8 o'clock the S. R. O. sign is hung out. The late arrivals have to keep on the move, or idle around, envying those happily seated in perfect contentment.

The Public Gardens have a humor all their own. The folk who cool themselves by warming the benches have a quiet fun that's peculiar. There's nothing boisterous. The place is too well policed for that. In time the folk who frequent the gardens have settled down to a peaceable state of mind that is enviable.

Human interest humor is the only kind on tap. All sorts of funny things happen, but it is the mirth that is quietly enjoyed. Henpeck Junior takes a fly at Miss Dingbat's rosy lips with his own. Miss Dingbat protests. Of course it's in a low voice. But the public's ears are keen. Henpecks and Dingbats look on approvingly. Two men that look mighty like Mr. A. Mutt, Esq., and his friend, Jeff, crowding the small end of a bench, smile, envy young Henpeck, and think of boyhood days. Mrs. Newlywed cuddles up closer to her dear boy. Everybody's happy, for everybody's in a buoyant frame of mind. The kiss had its own feint of forged seals would permit of an undue amount of warm billing and cooing. That's it."

"And say, Dingebat, did you notice that when a young couple of spooners toot a bunch they always sat in the middle, instead of at one end. Four people could easily sit on a bench. But that one couple wants to hobnob a on a whole bench, to keep off the disturbers of love's young dream."

"I have no doubt you are right," said Dingbat.

And so he was.

Just then there was a sound of kissing, and subdued protestations. Dingbat looked around. Henpeck followed suit. Both smiled. A newspaper man who had been eavesdropping on the conversation, looked around. Then he decided to beat it.

Down at the side of the pond, little Heinie, the eight-year-old Smith boy, was glimpsed. Heinie had a boat all to himself. A Henpeck girl and one of the Dingbat kiddies stood on the shore.

"Hey, there, Heinie, come in and let us get into the boat," they cried, in Neil Brinkley afternoon-off fashion.

"Not on yer life. Go an' hire a boat like I did," Heinie called back.

He rowed vigorously up and down, passing under the cute little bridge. Finally it dawned on him that, after all, three in a boat is a far better idea than just one. He rowed to where the children stood.

"Heinie, where'd you get the money?" asked the nine-year-old Henpeck girl.

"None uv yer business," exclaimed Heinie. "If you want ter come, come on. Jump in."

Without trying to find out how Heinie came by the thirty-five cents he paid for the boat for an hour, the two kiddies jumped in. Heinie rowed them off. They were happy as could be.

Once again it was a case of quiet humor.

Over in the boathouse was a batch of children, gay-hearted and merry. Red Japanese lanterns stretched around lent color to the scene. Some of the little ones were dressed in rags, it is true, but they were good mixers. After all, children make no class distinctions. So the bunch had a fine time.

Under a tree, a little distance off, the eavesdropper found a bench with one end unoccupied. In the centre were a lad and lassie, very much preoccupied. Stuck onto the other end were the men that looked like Mr. Mutt and his friend Jeff. From the centre came whispered words of love. Caresses were smuggled into friendly territory. The brushing of a palm over the girl's cheek left a wake of such blushing red as to be discernible in the dim light.

The eavesdropper removed. The sentiment was too strong. It made him heartsick. As he passed the other end Mr. Mutt arose from his place, while Jeff was quick to fill.

"Lend me the price of a meal, stranger," said Mr. Mutt to the eavesdropper. After the small change was passed Mr. Mutt entertained with anecdotes of his Reno trip.

"I knew the dinge would win," he said. "I had the right dope, didn't I, Jeff?"

"Naw, you didn't," said the little fellow.

Mr. Mutt let his friend have a stiff punch. The eavesdropper beat it as a bluecoated form appeared through the flower bed.

His next stop brought him alongside an old gentleman who knew all about the Public Gardens. The eavesdropper got some straight dope on the history of the gardens. The old fellow was more than four score, and for more than half a century had worked as an expert landscape gardener.

"Yes, I remember the Public Gardens when this place was a mere mud slough, or mush mire, away back in 1840," he began. "I recall well the time when Flagg & Ammour's circus camped on this piece of land in 1851. They had begun to fill it in in 1849, bringing the dirt from somewhere out Newton way. This continued until 1855, by which time, under Governor Gardner's administration, the place had been filled up and converted into a garden. Many people say this is Boston's garden spot. I say it is Boston's sore spot. It's all laid out wrong. They made a big mistake in laying it out this way——"

Down at the pond the eavesdropper again caught sight of the Dingbats and Henpecks, all together this time, on the wharf where the lanterns are hung and where the swan boats side up to get their crowds.

"Pauline, I think we can afford to give the family a ride on the swan boat," suggested Henpeck Senior. "What do you say?"

Mrs. Henpeck assented.

"Say, Dingbat, it costs only five cents a head; why don't you come with us?" asked Henpeck of his friend.

And so they made up a family party, taking up a whole swan boat. It was a fine ride, and the eavesdropper, who sneaked aboard after witnessing the lavish expenditure of money with alarm, had lots of fun. Once, one of the little Dingbats cried out.

"Pa, what makes the boat go?"

Pa had to tell about the man working the velocipede contraption with his feet, and guiding the rudder with his hands. At the wharf the families got off.

"I'm sorry little Bobby and his pa could not be out with us to-night," regretted Mrs. Dingbat. "But it's just as well, as that boy would have written us up. It's just as well they didn't come."

Fearing he would be discovered, the eavesdropper slunk away out towards the Boylston street entrance in the direction of home.

Nothing humorous about that, was there?

Well, it was the humor that makes the whole world smile.

The fellow who likes his quiet humor can get all he wants in the Public Gardens, but these have been occasionally outbreaks of rowdyism in the gardens, but these have been due to the loafers who have been cleaned out by the police within a week. Now, the police promise a restful quietude all the time. So the humor lovers can get as much of their favorite mental beverage as they wish.

Henpeck Senior loves nothing better than his little humor in the evening after tea. At his house they are plebeian folk and call it supper. In the Back Bay they call it dinner. Call it what you will, Henpeck loves his humor in the gardens. It's the best sort of dessert, he claims.

It didn't take Henpeck Senior long to leave his seat and approach Mrs. Dingbat, after the families had settled.

"Mrs. Henpeck wants you to come over and take my seat," he explained. "I'll talk it over with Dingbat."

So said, so done. While Mrs. Dingbat was furnishing Mrs. Henpeck with all the latest gossip, the two paterfamilases had a little harmless conversation all to themselves.

"This is the greatest place ever," ventures Henpeck.

"Some class," assented Dingbat. "Say, Dingbat, I wonder why these benches are all placed in little groups about the gardens?"

"For the life of me I can't say," came the reply. "Ah, here it is. The park superintendent fears that seat

THE BOYLSTON ZOO

Oh, look, mamma, what is this strance and beautiful creasure that is holding up the corner of Tremont and Boylston streets?

That is the Matinee Idol, my child.

Oh, see, mamma, what long hair it has.

That is the nature of the animal, my child. Much of its strength lies in its flowing locks.

Oh, see, mamma, what broad shoulders it has. Is it very strong?

Oh, yes, my child, it is always strong for a good tailor.

And what large eyes it has, mamma!

They are what is called soulful, my child, and are considered very dangerous.

By whom, mamma?

By itself, my child.

Oh, see, mamma, how it is rolling its eyes! Is it having a fit?

Oh, no, my child, it always does that way when a swell looking woman in an automobile draws up to the curb.

Where is the Matinee Idol found, mamma?

It roams over the entire country from the middle of September until the middle of June, but its favorite habitat is Boylston street, between Washington and Tremont. At this season of the year there is always a fine collection of them browsing in this locality.

Is it fierce, mamma?

Frequently, my child, especially in Shakespearian drama.

It looks very brave, mamma. Is it afraid of anything?

Only of getting fat, my child.

What is that strange noise it is making, mamma?

It is telling others of its species how it stood 'em up in Oshkosh, and how Belasco and Frohman are both trying to get it to create a part in a new play next season, but it is playing one of 'em off against the other.

But I notice, mamma, that the others are also making queer sounds in their throats. Why do they do that?

They are giving it the laugh, because they know that the only ones really fitted to interpret a fat part are themselves.

What does the Matinee Idol eat, mamma?

It alternates between lobster and champagne, and "corned beef and," my child, but its favorite food is taffy.

Can it eat much of that, mamma?

Unlimited quantities, my child. Nobody has yet seen a Matinee Idol whose appetite for it had been satisfied.

I observe, mamma, that all the Matinee Idols are young. Are there no old ones?

Oh, no, my child. When they get old they cease to be Matinee Idols.

What do they then become, mamma?

Back numbers, my child.

How does the Matinee Idol amuse itself, mamma?

Chiefly by getting divorces, my child, though it also finds diversion by gambling on the green.

Is the Matinee Idol intelligent, mamma?

Oh, yes, my child. It is far more intelligent than the parrot, because when it recites the words it has been taught it puts into them meaning that the author did not know was there. A clever Matinee Idol can make us laugh or cry, as it pleases, and helps us to forget our troubles. It is a very useful and be-nef-i-cent creature, and we should be very thankful to a kind Providence that has put this delightful animal into the world.

Is the Matinee Idol a domestic animal, mamma?

Oh, no, my child. A great many women have tried to break them to work in double harness, but no one has yet succeeded. Frequently they appear quite tame for a while, but as soon as the voice begins to gail they kick over the traces and escape back to freedom.

Does not this discourage women, mamma?

Oh, no, my child, for nothing ever shakes a woman's belief that she is the Only Great and Original Lion Tamer.

How intrepid women are, mamma!

You speak truly, my child. There was once a very fine specimen of the Matinee Idol known as Nat Goodwin, that four courageous women tried to do-mes-ti-cate, one after the other, and as each failed there were other brave souls waiting in line for a chance to tackle the job.

Do women admire the Matinee Idol, mamma?

Oh, yes, my child, it is their favorite of all animals, and is popularly known as the Ladies' Delight.

Do they go to see it often, mamma?

Oh, yes, my child, as often as they have the price, and they buy its photographs and stick them all over their rooms and frequently write it what are called mash notes.

What are these mamma?

Valuable evidence in alienation proceedings. Also proof of how big a fool a woman can really be, my child.

Are men also crazy about the Matinee Idol, mamma?

Oh, no, my child, they hate it.

Do they go to see it often, mamma?

Oh, no, my child. They never go to see it, unless they are dragged there by their wives or sweethearts.

Why do the women take their husbands and beaux to see the Matinee Idol, mamma?

To show the men what dubs they are at love making, my child, and how the thing should be done.

How does the Matinee Idol make love, mamma?

It seizes the beautiful heroine in its arms and clasps her to its manly breast in a strangle hold that loosens her back hair, and in thrilling accents cries, "Promise me you will be mine, or else over yonder cliff I end this miserable existence."

What do the women do when the Matinee Idol does this cunning trick, mamma?

They sit up and wish that they were the heroine.

And what do the men do, mamma?

They say naughty words between their teeth.

Oh, mamma, are this splendid creature with such a fine coat and who does so many clever stunts? And look at those other cunning little darlings, mamma. Which do you prefer, mamma?

I love them all, my child, and I should have been a richer woman if I had not spent so much money in going to see them.

Oh, see, mamma, how lovely this one is with the pale gray coat and the cute little straw hat, and what a fetching pose it has leaning against that lamp post with its paw in its breast.

It is ravishing my child.

May I feed it, mamma?

Revere Beach. Now

MEIN lieber Looey:—Mit your Mudder und leedle Max I haf rushed down here for der purpose of getting away from der heat, but der heat beat me to it—vich is der slangified vay of saying dot a hot vave has branch houses all ofer der country.

Der fairst crime committed py your leedle brother Max, vich is now fourteen of age, after he made an arrival here, vas to eggsecute some poeticals vich I enclose to you as follows so you can enchoy der pleasure, Looy, of vitnessing vost a terrible brother you haf in der family, to vit:—

Ach! der Summer girls in laces valk der broad delightful beach unde der sun prints on deir faces yust der simple title, "Peach!" All der vaves mit kiss vas roaring as dey dance along der shore, vile de mercury vas scoring as it nefer scored before.

Ach der brine vas on der brimy und der foam vas on der crest, und der bather looks so fine he yust parades around undressed. Al der sons of Father Neptune frohe vare eel grassed grow, und der lobster holds receptions down behind der undertow.

Ach! der bather's back vas burning und der freck vas on der face, bubbles big der surf vas churning und der vavelets run a race. Now der dainty city maiden yells ven high der billows grew, und der crab mit laughings laden grasse her by her pink vast toe.

Ach! der shirt vaist's vas on der girley und der girley's on der valk, und despite der burly-burly of der sea she still can talk in sweet accents, most disraptured, like der songs der breezes sing; und to ice cream vas it's captured sure she dossn't do a ding!

Ach! der wind blows herky-jerky through der coats and pockets und der masherette vas perky mit her necktie on her ear. Now der beach it vas resounding mit der tunes dot make us weep; und der surf vas loudly pounding on der doorway of der deep.

Ach! der sun vas sweetly smiling in a reddish hottish vay und der midsay vas beguiling der eggsecursionistic chay. Now der tin-type taker's taking all der please-look-pleasant" grins, und der fakir's busy faking all der yappish "Yust Came-ins."

Ach! now mit his highball potion floats der boozer in der brine, vare de dailies but der notion dot der ocean vas divine. Now der yachts vas vinging vinging vare der salty breezes blow und der Frankfutters vas singing of deir dog days long ago.

Ach! der batt vas on der booklet und der booklet son der string und der vee fish tooks a booklet ere he dis proceeds to sing. "I vould like to grace your table but I doan'd eat batt today!" Den der fisher tells der fable of de fish dot got avay.

Vare Leopold mailed a check for last week's alimony to his late vife vunce removed py der courts.

How aboud it, Looey?

Your leedle brother Max is dare mit der goots, ain't he not—I ask you!

Der place is crowded mit peoples dot came here because deir money screams to be vare someun can see it.

Everyody dot efer answered to roll call in der "400" of any village abofe der size of Squashville Centre vas here, togedder mit many whose numbers vas higher, but who make up to look like der real ding.

An ong dose present vas Leopold Pigglesouse der vell-known delicatessenist from Chincinnati. He is paying deep attention to Phyllis Ganderkurds, der daughter of Heiney Ganderkurds, der millionaire inventioner of der slippery elm shoe horn.

Leopold und Phyllis made a very beautiful picture yesterday as dey valked togedder down der beach to der post office.

Gus Bearhider, der videly known bunion broker, of Melrose, vas here mingling mit der udder pets of fashion. Gus vears a Panamother hat vich cost $100.

Instead of vearing a monogram on der front of der hat Gus has vorked in dare in red ink der price yust mentioned. Dis is very effectif und has started a new idea in svell Society.

Herr Conrad und Lena Bristlehauser, der leaders of der smart set in Vest Cantelouse, New Hampshire, created much eggscitement in Society here yesterday.

Conrad visited to bet forty tousand dollars on a flat-fish in der ballon ascension, und Lena opchecked on der grounds dot mit der forty tousand dey could build a perfume station next door to der glue factory in Vest Cantelouse und dus earn der undying applause of der neighbors at home.

Conrad refused der polite request of his vife, so mit vunderful presence of mind she at once unbuttoned vun of her diamond earrings und struck her husband sharply ofer der forehead, cutting a gash nt'ould a inch deep daroon.

Mercedes Cauliflower vas seen at Vonderlant Bark to day mit her fiance, Peter Cuckoohauser.

It vill be remembered dot Mercedes is der daughter und heiress of Jacob Cauliflower, der millionaire manufacturer of boneless tripe, vich has become such a fad in Society since der price of beef made a glancurtiss.

Peter Cuckoohauser is a rising young bricklayer on his father's side, but on account of der fortune left him by his mother he is now butterflying through life in a vite flannel suit.

Mr und Mrs Hans Shine-von-shine vare divorced yesterday at der home of der bride's parents. Der ceremony vas very simple but eggsensive to der late husband. Considerable alimony changed hands.

Der private cottage of Mrs. Reginald De Copenshauer has been beautifully decorationed in honor of der approaching divorce of deir daughter. Gladys from her husband, Percy von Skeeskee, der well-known manufacturer of der reversible two-step so much used by Society.

Cards vas also ould for a divorce in der family of der bouphousers, but owing to a typographical error in der cards it is impossible to say vedder is it der old man or der son. Both employ typewriters.

But I do luff to mingle mit Society here.

It is not chenerally known, but vun of my greater grandfadders was present ven der orichinal 400 landed on Plymouth Rock.

My greater grandfather owned der rock.

A cubble of nights after der orichinal 400 landed on Plymouth Rock der leader of der Smart Setters at dot time vas Mrs. Von Tweedledum, und she gafe a full dress ball.

My greater grandfather looked in at der full dress ball und vas so shocked dot he vent und opened a clothing store der next day.

Society nefer forgived him for dis insinivation.

But dot is how I come to have a feeling of sympathy mit der Smart Setters as ve find dem at Revere Beach und elsevare.

Some of der Smart Setters up here claim dey can chase deir ancestry back to der fairst apartment house in der Garden of Eden.

But I only laugh at such vain boastings because my ancestry goes so far back I haf to took a car unde get a transer to der Vechawken ferrysoat.

Among der Smart Setters now preceding a colored chent as dey roller-chair rushes down der beach after dinner vas Leopold Sousebuilder, der vell-known delicatessenist from Chinchinnati. He is here to follow der fun, but he seems to haf an idea dot der funs live in der hotel barroom, because dot is vare he does most of his following.

Anyvay, doan'd let der Society element frighten you, Looey, but come down here ven you get your vacation, because dey haf der finest ocean here I efer lost my breath in.

Yours mit luff,
D. DINKELSPIEL.

The Rapid-Fire Conversationalists.

AN Irishman found a street car transfer on the sidewalk and considered himself a nickel to the good. He boarded a crosstown car, and when the conductor came through for fares all the passengers passed out transfers, and the Irishman gave up his. The conductor looked at it a minute and passed it back, saying: "Come on, give me a nickel."

"You've got my fare," said the Irishman.

Why, this transfer is a day old."

"Well," replied the Irishman, "is it my fault if the car is late?"

A COUPLE of Irishmen were standing in front a fruit stand and one of them happened to notice some extra large grapefruit on exhibition.

"Do yerra know," he remarked to his companion, "I'd like to own one of those apples?"

His friend looked in wonder at the fruit.

"Th'n's sure the biggest I ever saw," he answered. "I'll bet there was a hundred of 'em on that tree."

DURING the last Democratic campaign a saloonkeeper on the Bowery, wishing to be impartial and not to offend any of his patrons, had the entire front of the outside of his place decorated with the emblems of all the political parties (except the Prohibitionist) that had a candidate in the field, together with pictures of every candidate.

Max came along one day and looked at the array. He pondered for a while, and then, with a broad grin on his face, remarked to a friend standing near him with something of an air of knowledge:

"I see McKinley isn't running this year."

WHILE passing a building that was in the course of construction an Irishman was hit on the head by a brick which fell from one of the upper stories. He was taken home and put to bed and for days was seriously ill, suffering severe pain. He employed a lawyer to collect damages, and it was such a clear case of negligence on the part of the contractors that they settled with the lawyer for $500 without going to court.

The lawyer then went to Dr. Dinnen's house and was shown to the sick room.

"Well, Pat," he said, "I have good news for you. The contractors have settled for your injury. I got $500 from them. Here's $50 for you.

Pat stared at him through his bandages.

"What do you mean by my getting $50 for me?"

"Why, that's your share. I got the rest for bringing the case and expenses," said jolly Pat, sitting up in his chair, who got hit with that brick, anyway?"

"I SEE that Dr. Cook has discovered the North Pole.

"It's a long way behind the times. Did you see how Dr. Cook has been discovered?" I guess you don't know anything about the North Pole, anyway. I'll bet you can't name five animals that are found at the North Pole.

"Sure I can.

"What are they?

"Four polar bears and a sea lion."

"Where?"

"At a fancy ball."

"You mean a ball dance. What kind of language do you talk, anyway?"

"I make my own language."

"WHICH is of the most use to mankind, the sun or the moon?"

"What a foolish question to ask! The moon is of the most use, of course."

"How do you make that out?"

"Why, the moon shines at night, when everything is dark, and lights things up so you can see what you're doing. The sun comes out in the day time, when it isn't needed."

* * *

"YOU know, on the other side of the earth it's a day later than it is here."

"I don't believe it."

"Well, I'll prove it to you. If you was in Australia and I was here, and you was to be shot to-day, I'd know it yesterday."

"Well, if you was a friend of mine you'd send me a telegram to-day telling me I'm shot."

"WHAT is it that makes day and night, anyway?"

"Well, you see the earth turns around on an axle."

"Do you mean to say that the earth turns around and around?"

"Yes; what are you laughing at?"

"I was just thinking how funny it would be if the axis got rusty and the earth stopped."

"Why, the axle couldn't get rusty, they keep it oiled all the time."

"Where do they oil it, in China?"

"No, in Greece."

FIRST CLOWN—Say, Bill, do you remember the day the lion got loose out in Reno, Nevada?

Other Clown—I'll never forget it.

F. C.—Say, but you did climb that tree some fast.

O. C.—Yes, and I'd have climbed quite some faster if you hadn't been ahead of me.

A FRIEND of mine was told by his wife one evening at dinner that a lot of company was coming to call that night. Immediately he went to the hallway and gathered up all the umbrellas that were there.

"What's the matter?" asked his wife. "Are you afraid that they'll steal them?"

"No I'm afraid they'll recognize them."

A MAN who appeared to be in a great hurry beckoned to a cabman who was driving close by.

"Was—where—do—do you w-w-want to g-g-go?" asked the cabby, who stuttered badly.

"To the corner of Broadway and Sixty-eighth street, and in a hurry, too," instructed the man, as he jumped into the cab.

Before the man inside had taken notice of where he was the cab pulled up at the s-s-s-ide of the street, and the cabby opened the door. The man was about to pay his fare, when he happened to notice he was at the corner of Broadway and Seventy-sixth street, eight blocks beyond his destination.

"I told you to stop at Sixty-eighth street," he said angrily to the driver.

"I-I-I-I-I-know-know you d-d-d-did, b-b-but I c-c-couldn't say wh-wh-wh-whoa qu-qu-qu-quick enough."

AN ARGUMENT came up in the dressing rooms the other night as to how long the legs of a normally built man should be. All sorts of opinions were expressed and the argument was waxing hot, when one who had remained quiet all the time spoke up: "I should say they ought to be just long enough to reach from his hips to the ground."

WHILE looking for a mask to wear in one of his numbers a clown went into a Washington street store and asked of a very plain-looking woman, "Have you a false face?" The clown suffered a severe chill.

The Prettiest Child in Europe.

London, July 10

ALL artistic Europe has gone wild over little Mildred Anne Deverest, the five-year-old daughter of Mr. Walter Deverest, a rather well-known London painter, and Mrs. Deverest, a writer. Little Mildred is said to conform to every standard of perfection for a child of her age. She has been having her pictures taken by the dozen, and her proud parents have allowed a few of the most distinguished artists of Europe to incorporate her charms on their canvases. The bold challenge is made that little Mildred is the most beautiful child in Europe.

Perhaps there are prettier children in America. Here are some of her best photographs, that you may compare your baby with this one.

While the little Deverest girl's proportions are said to be perfect, it is her face and peculiar charm of expression that have set many raving over her. Little Miss Mildred, although only five, is already an adept in the arts of the coquette. When she poses she drapes about herself a mantel of semi-maturity. Her eyes sometimes become as grave as though she were looking into the problems of a matrimonial future. Sometimes they dance with the grown-up wiles of an accomplished flirt.

Who will Drive the Air Ships?

"Coming Events Cast Their Shadows Under"—The Enormous Shadow of the Deutschland, Photographed from the Airship.

NO human being has ever traveled faster than 127 miles an hour. That was the record established by Victor Hemery, driving a racing automobile at Diamond Beach, when he went a mile in 28 seconds. According to this record, a man can travel a mile in a minute, and aviators are beginning to wonder whether we will be able to get drivers or pilots to handle such fast-going vehicles.

Zeppelin, the ill-fated dirigible, the Deutschland and the first air vessel to carry passengers on a regular schedule, maintained an average speed of only thirty-five miles an hour, but aeroplanes have gone considerably faster, sixty miles an hour having been attained.

A new type of aeroplane has just been perfected by an Englishman, Mr. L. B. Goldman, which is known as the Crucifer, and which is much more suitable for high speed work than the present frail and skeleton types. The Crucifer will carry passengers and will be able to travel at a very high rate of speed.

The average man without experience in fast driving would be too bewildered to steer a vehicle at the rate of even sixty miles an hour, and there are only a few professionals who can handle one safely at the greater speed of 100 miles an hour. It is evident therefore, that the pilot of the aeroplane of future will be left in the lurch for want of a pilot to handle it unless a new race of men are developed for the purpose, and aviators are naturally turning toward the fast automobile drivers to help them out of this dilemma.

Already a large number of the more successful aviators have been recruited from the ranks of the automobile drivers. Among the best known of these perhaps is Mr. Lewis P. Strang, winner of the Briscoe Trophy and numerous other cups, and holder of many speed records, who has gone a mile in thirty-seven seconds. Mr. Strang has now taken up aeroplaning and will soon be duplicating in the air the hair-raising exploits which made him famous on the race track. Mr. Strang believes that the automobile driver of to-day will be the aeroplanist of to-morrow, and he has some very interesting reasons for his conclusions.

By Lewis P. Strang.

MOST of the "flying men" of to-day were the racing drivers of yesterday, and many of the famous racing drivers are constantly joining the ranks of the aviators.

Bleriot, the inventor and builder of the Bleriot aeroplanes and the first man to cross the English Channel in the air, was a great auto driver. Rolls, the millionaire Englishman who was killed a few days ago in a fall from his aeroplane owed much of his success in the air to the experience he had obtained as an auto driver. Poor Le Blon, who was also killed in an aeroplane, drove in the Vanderbilt Cup race here and competed in many of the great automobile races abroad. Rogier, who for many years drove De Dietrich cars in the great automobile races, is now flying an aeroplane in France, and Joseph Seymour, another driver, is now flying in America. Harry Harkness, the famous millionaire autoist, who made the New York-to-Boston record, now owns and flies two aeroplanes.

The auto driver of to-day will be the aeroplanist of to-morrow, not so much because the fast aeroplanes will demand the skill of such men, but because such men will demand the excitement of the fast aeroplane. Dare-devil drivers like Le Blon, who escaped death a dozen times in the auto races only to meet it in an aeroplane, crave great speed much as a drunkard demands drink, and when the limit has been reached in the construction of fast automobiles they will naturally turn to the more thrilling possibilities of the aeroplane.

But the fast aeroplane will require a man accustomed to think quickly in danger and to be devoid of fear. The fast automobile driver never gets rattled, even if he is going to be dashed into eternity the next minute, he keeps his head. Such men ought to make good aviators.

But, perhaps, more important than their cool-headedness is the sixth sense that racing drivers seem to possess. This "sense" is not seeing or hearing or feeling, although it is sometimes referred to as a sense of "feel" for their machine, but it is a sense which enables them to tell, without any conscious calculation, just how fast they can make a turn without overturning, how close they can run to a corner, and the exact distance to begin to use the brakes to stop at an exact spot.

It is a sense of balance, and would be of the greatest value to the aeroplanist. Even if they are travelling a hundred miles an hour, racing drivers can tell by this "sense" when something is going wrong with the engine.

In an aeroplane there are a hundred little wires to be watched and adjusted after, and the auto-driver's habit of seeing that everything is in absolute order before starting in a race will be particularly valuable in getting a plane ready for flight.

Again, racing autos have always been built as light as possible consistent with strength, and the great racing motors have always been delicate pieces of mechanism. In this respect the aeroplane is very similar, and the racing driver's knowledge of the gas engine alone should put him head and shoulders above the average aviator.

Of course the handling of an aeroplane is much more complicated than an auto, and not only requires steering to the right and left, but also up and down, besides the steering of the balancing planes to maintain an even keel, but a man who has mastered a racing car does it automatically and will automatically master the aeroplane, his partial education in these operations enabling him to learn the slightly different manoeuvres of the aeroplane more rapidly than one who is not accustomed to motion.

In travelling at a high rate of speed the driver must keep his eyes focused a long way off. In auto races where an average speed of sixty miles an hour is maintained for hours at a stretch, the driver keeps his eyes riveted on a point from one-half to three-quarters of a mile away. Going at the rate of three hundred miles an hour, which I believe aeroplanes will eventually attain, it will be necessary for the pilot to look at least two miles ahead, for he will cover that distance in twenty-four seconds, and he will have to be prepared to avoid possible obstacles or obstructions. One of the most valued gifts of the natural born auto driver is far sight, and this faculty will make him particularly valuable as a fast aviator, although deficiency in that respect might perhaps be overcome by strong eye glasses.

It is a common impression that if a man fell from the Park Row Building in New York, for instance, he would be dead before reaching the ground, death being caused by the wind pressure against mouth and nostrils, resulting in suffocation. While I do not think that is true, because the victim of such a fall would be going at only eighty-six miles an hour when he reached the ground, and I have travelling at over a hundred miles an hour without any particular discomfort, I can readily imagine that the average persons would be seriously affected in this respect in travelling at high speed. Even in an express train laymen sometimes experience difficulty in breathing when sitting next to an open window, and I have no doubt that in an aeroplane going several hundred miles an hour many men would find breathing impossible. For that reason, the experience of auto-drivers would be particularly useful to them in the air.

The auto-driver courts danger and thrives on it. When the auto becomes tame and insipid he will turn to the aeroplane, and there will be plenty of demand for him in the new field.

They believe in the influence of the mind on the body. From the time that little Mildred could begin to notice objects she was surrounded by the most beautiful statuary and pictures only.

When he began to talk and to understand it was impressed upon her that she must grow up beautiful. She was taught to worship beauty. Besides this aesthetic training, a course of physical instruction was carried on by her father. She was taught to chin herself, to round out her shoulders and chest. She was swung by her tiny feet to make her joints supple. She has never slept one night except in the open air. Her diet has been of the simplest, and little Mildred does not yet know the taste of meat. She drinks water, milk and occasionally cocoa. She bathes once a day, and fifteen minutes in the morning, fifteen minutes at night and a half hour during the middle of the day are set apart for exercise as vigorous as any ancient code.

For one hour every day little Mildred contemplates some beautiful work of art, some wonderfully painted face, some exquisitely carved marble. She is taught to say: "I must be as beautiful as that."

Oh What a Joke on the Diplomats!

"Run Along, Sonny," Said They to Pink-Cheeked Young Gardiner Bell at Smart Washington Receptions---And His Revenge When He Made Up as "Beautiful, Rich Miss Desmond."

"Messenger boys arrived in droves with invitations for the captivating 'Miss Desmond'."

"DONNER UND BLITZEN!" groaned the 23d Acting Second Secretary of the German Embassy at Washington.

"Corpi di Bacco!" shouted the 14th Acting Military Attache of the Italian Embassy.

"Caramba!" hissed the 9th Acting Naval Attache of the Spanish Legation.

The 33d Acting Second Secretary brought his fist down on his desk. "Vot lies? Shall dot cub—dot pink-faced boy—dot Gardiner Bell, vich should be wearing dose bettisoats all der time yet, shall he escape? Nein!"

"When I catch-a him he get-a da coltellato. I stick-a him in-a da rib!" And the mustache of the Italian Acting Military Attache bristled fiercely.

"For Senor Gardiner Bell, w'en he grow up an' is no longer muchacho, I shall be ready wit-a-zis." And the Acting Spanish Naval Attache, handling an imaginary foil, made a neat thrust in carte.

"But," I say," remarked the Third Secretary of the British Embassy, "you don't mean to say that all three of you proposed marriage to this boy in girl's clothes?"

"Vot's! It is one affairs for our German confrere," said the Second Secretary of the French Embassy, with a mischievous glance at the wrathful German Acting Second Secretary, who hissed furiously. "An' w'ile he avenge his own honor he will also punish Monsieur Gardiner Bell for one violation of ze law of his country, which say no man shall appear in public as a woman. N'est-ce-pas?"

But young Gardiner Bell, having had sweet revenge upon a score of diplomatists in Washington society, who had persisted through two seasons in putting him on the head and telling him to run home to his mother, had escaped from the scene of his record-breaking escapade, not to return for many months.

Gardiner Bell is the son of Charles J. Bell, millionaire lawyer and banker, of Washington, D. C., and nephew of Alexander Graham Bell, of telephone fame and fortune. The two girls who aided him in his revenge were his sister Grace, now Mrs. Granville Fortescue, and Miss Mary Chew, his boyhood girl chum, who was later to elope with and marry her fellow conspirator.

Even three years ago, when these three principals in the affair were unconsciously preparing for it, they were familiar figures in Washington society. Gardiner Bell, when in "prep" school, being specially trained to enter the diplomatic service, developed a talent for ventriloquism.

"It was Sister Grace who superintended the costume and toilet department."

As he was slender, with regular, finely cut features and a beautiful complexion, this talent enabled him to amuse his sister, and Miss Mary Chew with girl impersonations. Coached and trained by them he learned all the secrets of passing himself off as a dazzling social belle.

In the meantime, as a young man of fashion, he was attending the best social functions at the Capital, particularly those which attracted the Diplomatic Corps, of which he was really anxious to become a member. Owing to his slender figure and his delicate complexion, with his youthful aspect generally, he was not taken any too seriously by full-fledged diplomats. Once, after a peculiarly trying occasion, he remarked to his sister:

"Grace, I've got to get even with those fellows somehow. I'm tired of being patted on the head and told to 'run along, sonny.'"

That speech was the little seed from which the whole conspiracy sprung. Miss Grace quoted it to Miss Mary Chew. Both were full of sympathy for Gardiner. They put their heads together.

"It's a shame the way they treat the poor boy," said Miss Mary. "He's told me about it. The worst offender is that pompous German acting second secretary I would love to see that big Dutchman taken down a peg."

"As I'm not out yet, of course I don't know any of them," said Sister Grace. "But I've heard Gardiner railing at some sort of Spanish Acting Naval Attache, who makes himself especially offensive."

"That's true, too," assented Miss Mary. "But, next to the pompous German, poor Gardiner finds the attitude of the Italian Acting Naval Attache hardest to put up with. Of course he can't do a thing—the poor boy!"

"I've heard that the big German is a great ladies' man," mused Sister Grace. "They say he makes violent love to every pretty girl who happens to be an heiress."

"It's the same with all of them," said Miss Mary.

And then she gave a little shriek of delight.

"I have it, Grace! They shall meet our charming young heiress, 'Miss Mabel Desmond'!"

"Splendid!" exclaimed Sister Grace, clapping her hands. "They shall meet 'Miss Desmond,' and fall in love with 'Miss Desmond' and propose to 'Miss Desmond.' Gardiner can do it as easy as anything. Oh, won't that be getting even!"

"We'll have to 'personally conduct' him," said Miss Mary thoughtfully, "engineer him through the boudoirs and ladies' dressing rooms, and all that."

"Yes," admitted Sister Grace, "and we can't let a single soul into our secret. Wait, I'll run and bring Gardiner, and we'll plan our campaign."

At first the prospect alarms him. But on the girls' promise of absolute secrecy, and of their constant guidance among the obvious pitfalls of a man masquerading as a woman, he consented, entering into the conspiracy with enthusiasm.

It was Sister Grace who superintended the costume and toilet department. To pretty Mary Chew fell the task of coaching Gardiner in all those nuances of ingenuousness and coquetry which belong to the technique of a debutante.

Truth to tell, Gardiner would have liked to prolong indefinitely that part of the coaching process designed to bring his diplomat-tormentors to their knees before the charming young heiress, "Miss Desmond." Several times when pretty, blonde Mary Chew, playing the amorous diplomat's part, threw herself on her knees to him, begging "Miss Desmond"

Indeed, those scenes grew very palpitating for both, as the sequel was to show. But Miss Chew persisted, and presently both girls declared "Miss Desmond" perfect in her part. All that now lacked was an auspicious social occasion at which to "bring her out."

After many anxious conferences between the three conspirators, it was agreed that "Twin Oaks," the beautiful country place of the Bells, should be the scene of "Miss Desmond's" social debut, and at the coming-out party Sister Grace, and the details were arranged accordingly. As the flower of the diplomatic corps was sure to be present, Gardiner Bell would have an opportunity to look for revenge while introducing "Miss Desmond" to Washington society.

The great occasion arrived. More than three hundred guests were present, all members of the Capital's smartest sets. They were received by Miss Bell, standing beside her father. According to the conspirators' programme, however, there were two of the most charming guests who did not have to run the gauntlet of the receiving lines. These were Miss Mary Chew and her "old school chum," "Miss Mabel Desmond." They watched the others assembling in the great ball room between slightly parted curtains at one end.

As may be imagined, Gardiner Bell had provided his father with a satisfactory excuse for his son's absence. Hearing the name, the German Acting Second Secretary, whose front elevation, as architects would say, was spangled with decorations, was heard to remark:

At length, while "The Blue Danube" was stirring the dancers into activity, Miss Chew and her lovely, slender, brunette friend, "Miss Desmond," quietly appeared among them.

Instant stampede of gilded youth to claim "Miss Desmond" for the next waltz. The spry Italian Acting Military Attache "landed" first—while the ponderous German Acting Second Secretary gnawed his mustache. Again the big German was cut out by the agile Spanish Acting Naval Attache—but so fierce-ly did his German confrere glare at him that the joy in the walls of whispering soft nothings in "Miss Desmond's" coral ear was much marred. Still "Miss Desmond" felt "she" was doing pretty well. During an interval she whispered in Mary Chew's ear:

"The Italian and the Spaniard are both mine, as soon as they get a chance to propose."

Swearing destruction to any man who stood in his way, the big German finally captured "Miss Desmond" for the lancers, and after that carried her off bodily to supper, where he overwhelmed her with attentions. Moreover, he was able to segregate the charming debutante for two minutes behind a palm, where "Miss Desmond" had a chance to practice what Mary Chew had so carefully taught her."

"You hat der peauty, 'Miss Desmond,' of der early Pyzandine Princesses. Your complexion ist softer as dot vot gomes from der precese mit der Rhine vere I haf mine ancestral castle yet."

"Oh, I would so love to own a real German castle," sighed "Miss Desmond."

"Noddings—noddings else vould pe a proper settings for your peauty," said the German Acting Secretary, pressing "her" hand.

"Alas!" sighed "Miss Desmond," while her long lashes brushed her cheeks, "no such joy can ever be mine. Poor girls who have beauty enjoy such an unfair advantage. They know that they are loved for themselves alone. How often have I lamented that I am an heiress!"

"Ozzuse ma, 'Miss Desmond'," began the German in tender tones——

And just then Mary Chew, fearful of too much precipitation, tore her friend from the German's side and guarded her close during the remainder of the evening—while the German Acting Second Secretary, the Italian Acting Military Attache and the Spanish Acting Naval Attache devoured "her" with their eyes while glaring fiercely at each other.

The very next day, while Gardiner Bell was exacting another pleasant but quite unnecessary lesson from Miss Mary Chew, the big German drove up to the Chew mansion with an immense bouquet which he desired to personally present to Miss Chew's charming friend, "Miss Desmond."

It was Gardiner who grasped the opportunity to coldly inform the German Acting Second Secretary that "Miss Desmond" had just departed for her Northern home—ading malliciously:

"Miss Desmond' expects to return later in the season."

Young Gardiner Bell was now so enamored of his role of an irresistible debutante that, with the connivance of Sister Grace and Miss Chew, "Miss Desmond" got into the habit of turning up in Washington quite unexpectedly. During that season and the following one "she" quite established herself in Washington boudoirs and as a centre of attraction at important social occasions.

"She" skilfully played the German, the Italian and the Spanish diplomat against each other until they grew lean and gaunt from hope deferred and from jealousy of each other.

It was at the Bachelors' Cotillion of a year ago last Christmas that "Miss Desmond" forced the denouement of the comedy. As usual, Miss Chew was "her" inseparable companion. It was after supper that the German Acting Second Secretary found his opportunity.

His protestations were most passionate, his proposal absolute and unreserved. Miss Chew, at some distance, half hidden, knew that Gardiner's revenge was complete. The next instant she was horrified to hear "Miss Desmond" give vent to a peal of manly laughter. It was Gardiner's own intensely masculine, "Ha, ha, ha, ha!" She saw the startled German give one look into the eyes of "Miss Desmond" and then turn and flee from "her" as from the plague.

Another account has it that several suspicious bachelors rushed upon the scene, and the Spanish Acting Naval Attache snatched off "Miss Desmond's" artistic brunette wig.

Mary Chew lost not a minute in getting herself and "Miss Desmond" into their wraps and hurrying "her" away in a taxicab. So deftly was the thing done that few besides the three diplomat suitors were the wiser.

Gardiner Bell, as related, made himself scarce in Washington after that for a whole year. You already know how he and Mary Chew planned an elopement, which was frustrated by her parents carrying her off, weeping, to Europe; and how, quite recently, they escaped surveillance, went to Baltimore, and were married at Old St. Paul's by the Rev. E. S. Neives, to be forgiven by their respective parents, though young Gardiner had not yet achieved his first diplomatic appointment.

Lest you should consider this published account of "Miss Desmond's" exploit indiscreet—though admitted by both Sister Grace and the new Mrs. Gardiner Bell—it is explained that the three duped diplomats are no longer in Washington, and bloodthirsty, having been promoted by their respective Governments to more responsible posts at other capitals.

The Wild Father of All Wheat Just Found in the Holy Land.

The Ancient, Drought-Proof, Cold and Heat-Defying Ancestors of the World Staple Discovered by the United States Government in Palestine —And Now the Deserts May Become Earth's Granaries.

A Stalk of the New Grain from Palestine.

By Rene Bache.

WHAT seems to be the most important and valuable plant discovery that has been made within the last century is about to be announced by the Government Plant Bureau. It is nothing less than the original wild wheat —the primitive stock from which all the cultivated wheats of the present day are

The discovery was made in Palestine—that is to say, in the Holy Land, in upper Galilee, where this wild wheat is native to the soil. In some places thereabout it grows quite profusely. There is apparently no question of the fact that this was the scene of the first cultivation of wheat, all other varieties of the grain we now know having been developed, in the course of many thousands of years, from the Galilean plant.

The most important point in connection with the matter, however, is not historical nor botanical, but economic. There is excellent reason to believe that this primitive wheat, by reason of its extraordinary hardiness and ability to get along with a minimum of water, can be grown profitably over wide areas in our own country which, for lack of sufficient rainfall, cannot be utilized for the production of any cereal with which we have been acquainted hitherto.

The wild wheat bears larger and heavier grains than any cultivated wheat. It flourishes in poor and rocky soil, with a minimum of water. It does not seem to be affected by diseases or attacked by insect pests. Dr. Aaron Aaronsohn, a botanist of high reputation, who made the discovery, states that he found the precious plant at altitudes all the way from 600 feet below the level of the Mediterranean (near the Dead Sea) up to 8,000 feet above sea level on Mount Hermon, in the zone of Alpine temperatures.

This means that the wheat is not only drought-proof, but heat-proof and cold-proof. Accordingly, it ought to prove exceedingly valuable in our farthest northern latitudes. Dr. Aaronsohn expresses his conviction that "by selection and crossing we shall obtain races of wheat from this source especially adapted to arid regions, and other races valuable for cold and elevated areas."

Palestine is surprisingly like the State of California. It is (says Dr. Aaronsohn) practically a California reduced to about one-twentieth in size, but markedly similar in general topography, climate, vegetation and agricultural possibilities. Like California, Palestine is longest from north to south, with very high mountains, rising to an elevation of nearly two miles, and very deep depressions. The Dead Sea, 1,200 feet below sea level, is the deepest of all the world's hollow places, and, like the Death Valley of California, it is situated in the southern extremity of the country.

Our agricultural explorers who, sent out by the Government, have travelled extensively in the Orient during the last few years, have brought back with them not only many valuable plants, but also knowledge which has given birth to hope that the vast arid and semi-arid regions of the interior of the United States may yet be rendered productive and profitable —even those extensive areas which now appear to be worthless deserts. In order that such a result may be accomplished, it is necessary merely (says Dr. Aaronsohn) that we shall introduce the requisite plants and the requisite methods of cultivation. Already from the Orient have come the oats of Kherson and a hard wheat of Russia and Turkey, which have extended the culture of cereals to regions hitherto uncultivated.

The Palestine Village of Ain and the Slope of Mt. Hermon, Where the Wheat Was Discovered.

In the Orient are to be found almost all of the wild plants from which, beginning in prehistoric times, the cultivated crops of our own day have been developed. Some of the most important of the early steps in agriculture, when man was first beginning to be a farmer, seem to have been taken in Palestine—a region extraordinarily rich in plant species. Thus it is not surprising to find that all of our wheats were originally derived from a wild plant that grew in a district over which the feet of Jesus wandered when he was a child.

Nevertheless, only ten years ago, a distinguished botanist, the Count de Solms-Laubach, declared that the genealogical record of wheat had disappeared forever, and that its life history could be written only by guess. One difficulty in tracing it back lay in the fact that its cultivation was so very old. Schliemann, when he dug into the ruins of ancient Troy (destroyed 1184 B. C.), found plenty of evidence that wheat was grown in Asia Minor at that period. In Egyptian tombs 6,000 years old have been found considerable quantities of wheat—all of it the kind known at the present time as "emmer." But the same kind of wheat has been discovered in the lake dwellings of Wangen and Robenhausen, which date back to before the Bronze Age—at least 10,000, and perhaps 15,000, years.

It is evident, then, that "emmer" is the particular species of wheat that has been cultivated from the very beginning of civilization, and no reasonable doubt exists that it was the progenitor of our cultivated wheats. The problem thus boils itself down to discovering the original wild plant from which this "emmer" was derived.

Dr. Aaronsohn is director of the Agricultural Experiment Station at Haifa, in Palestine. While making a trip through Upper Galilee, not long ago, he noticed by mere chance in a crevice of limestone rock a single plant which at first sight looked like barley, but which on closer inspection proved to be wheat. The development of the head and grains was so perfect—so nearly like the forms produced under cultivation at the present day—that the botanist could not at first realize quantities of the wheat, and has since that this was merely a wild wheat. It planted it, growing it very success- had a very vigorous growth and bore heads with awns (beards) six inches in length.

Later on he came across other plants of the same kind in great abundance. Descending from the summit of Mount Hermon (9,488 feet high) toward Ain, a little village on its eastern slope, he found quantities of them growing at an altitude of one mile and downward from that level. But the most astonishing things about them was the number of varieties they exhibited. They differed greatly in details of structure and appearance. In some cases the whole ear was black; in others the awns were black.

Further investigation showed that the plant was unquestionably native to the region about Mount Hermon and the northern part of the Trans-Jordan region, and that it was a wheat escaped from cultivation could not be entertained for a moment. In the first place this wild species of wheat is not cultivated anywhere in Syria and Palestine; and, secondly, it rarely appears on soils that have been cultivated for any purpose. It grows only on the slopes of the driest and most rocky hills, and in places exposed to the hottest rays of the Oriental sun.

Oddly enough, the wild wheat is always found in company with wild barley and usually mixed with it. Now, it has always been difficult to say whether barley or wheat is the older crop. The oldest writers always speak of the two together, and in excavations in Egypt and elsewhere they are invariably found associated. Why (suggests Dr. Aaronsohn), may we not assume that our prehistoric ancestors began the cultivation of the two cereals simultaneously, and that they grew barley and wheat together just as they occur to-day when wild?

Dr. Aaronsohn made a caravan trip around the Dead Sea to the south, and, having pushed some distance into Arabia, reascended from El-Mazra, on the southeast shore of the Dead Sea, 1,300 feet below sea level, toward the plateau of Moab, which is in some places more than 3,300 feet above sea level. There he found the wild wheat growing as beautiful as in the neighborhood of Mount Hermon.

The botanist gathered considerable subject from the pen of Dr. Aaronsohn. In summarizing his observations, the botanist says that he believes that not only wheat, but oats, barley and rye originated in Syria and Palestine, or at least near by. As for the wild wheat, the fact that it endures the most extreme climatic conditions seems to have a very important bearing upon its future economic possibilities. By the selection and crossing of this wild cereal, which prefers poor, rocky, shallow, dry soil, and thrives without any cultivation, it should be possible to produce new races of wheats which will be very hardy. And in this way it should be practicable to extend the cultivation of the bread crop to regions from which it is at present excluded by the low quality of the soil and the severity of the climate.

In conclusion, he says: "The countries adjoining the regions where the wild wheat has been found should be carefully explored. We should determine its exact area of distribution and thoroughly study its numerous varieties and forms, their life history, etc. This would place us in a position to utilize these wild varieties to the best advantage in the creation of new cultural races. Those who know what is being done at present in the way of creating plant races by selection and hybridization will agree with me in saying that the cultivation of wheat may be revolutionized by utilization of these wild forms.

"It seems to me that we are justified in hoping to produce races of wheat better adapted than any we now possess to the semi-arid regions of Algeria, Tunis, Syria, Egypt and Turkestan, as well as to point like in the fact that it will re-

those of America. If we secure races not serve alone for proper nutrition of the body, because an amount of bread is as much as one human can eat sufficient to supply the requisite proportion of these vast areas, the world's total product would furnish much more carbonaceous food than necessary. In a mixed diet, however, this discrepancy is of little importance, because the deficiency of protein is made up by such foods as meat and cheese. Bread and milk forms a much more suitable diet than bread alone. Where bread forms the whole or the main part of the diet, as it does among large numbers of the poor, the deficiency of protein is of much more consequence. By the use of skim milk instead of water for making the dough, however, the cost of the bread is not increased very much and the protein may be increased as much as two per cent.

"The study of the wild plants of our little importance, because the deficiency of cereals should not serve merely botanical and historical ends. It has a practical economic importance. Its ultimate aim is to produce more bread at less expense where production is difficult and costly, and to render this production possible where up to the present time it has been impossible."

The importance of Dr. Aaronsohn's discovery from an economic standpoint may be realized from the fact that it will reduce the cost of bread, and bread has always held a high place amongst the most nutritive foods. Bread contains from 35 to 40 per cent water and the remainder is all nutritive material. The nutritive elements of bread consist of a large amount of carbohydrates, a moderate amount of protein and a small amount of mineral matter.

Since there is relatively an excess of carbohydrates and a deficiency of protein in wheat, bread could not serve alone for proper nutrition of the body, because an amount of bread is as much as one human can eat sufficient to supply the requisite proportion of these vast areas, the world's total product would furnish much more carbonaceous food than necessary. In a mixed diet, however, this discrepancy is of little importance, because the deficiency of protein is made up by such foods as meat and cheese. Bread and milk forms a much more suitable diet than bread alone. Where bread forms the whole or the main part of the diet, as it does among large numbers of the poor, the deficiency of protein is of much more consequence. By the use of skim milk instead of water for making the dough, however, the cost of the bread is not increased very much and the protein may be increased as much as two per cent.

The commercial possibilities in Dr. Aaronsohn's discovery can hardly be overestimated. To grow wild wheat is a much cheaper undertaking than the production of ordinary wheat crops, and hundreds of thousands of acres of arid land now lying idle in the West may be put to profitable use.

Then again, the newly discovered wheat is not affected by the diseases to which ordinary wheat is subject, nor is it susceptible to the pests which prove so destructive to ordinary wheat crops. The cost of production of wild wheat will, for this reason, be much less and the price of bread will be correspondingly reduced.

The secret to the coming secret about Dr. Aaronsohn's discovery. All the information he has collected and the results of the experiments he has made will be fully set forth in the special bulletin which the Department of Agriculture is issuing and will be available to everyone who desires to take advantage of them.

The owners of large tracts of idle land in the West will be able now to utilize their holdings in a most profitable manner.

It is said that the wild wheat is very hardy and requires a minimum of moisture to sustain it. There is no section of the United States where it could not be raised.

Dr. Aaronsohn is a remarkable man in many ways and is said to know more about conditions in the Biblical Orient than any scientist who has visited America before. Since his discovery, he has lectured in the West, and the announcement of his discovery was received with the greatest enthusiasm by scientific agriculturists who were fortunate enough to be present.

Why Women Are Never Too Old to Marry.

TIME was when, if a girl was not married at twenty-one, she was supposed to resign herself to the single life for the rest of her days. A little later on in the world's history—indeed, within the memory of those living—it was thought that twenty-five was the utmost limit at which a woman's despairing hopes could cling to matrimony.

The early marriage is the exception now, not the rule; and there is as much wonder and objection nowadays over the marriage of a girl of seventeen as there would once have been over that of a woman of seventy.

In old days, royal princesses married at seventeen. In these days they marry at seven-and-twenty, or even much later. No doubt one reason lies in the fact that women no longer give up their youth as prematurely as they used to do. At five-and-twenty a woman once laid aside all feminine vanity, betook herself to hideous styles of dressing, and gave up all her activity and her interest in the outside world. Of course, she grew old at once.

Nowadays, healthy exercise, activity of mind, and manifold interests combine to keep a woman still young at an age when she might be a grandmother.

People are inclined to suppose that mercenary motives alone can account for the marriage of a woman advanced in life; but this is a great mistake. In many cases it is an old lover, long parted by time and circumstances, who makes his appearance again, and wins her at last, though he has waited so long to do it.

To him she never seems old—the old love casts over her a glamor still that makes her retain the charm and fascination of the days when he first courted her, and he is as proud of her as if she were still the girl he wooed in the long past days every one else has forgotten.

Sometimes they have only met in later days. No reason, on that account, for younger people to fancy all sentiment and romance must needs be dead. Within them there is as much romance, sometimes, lingering under a faded exterior as under one in its first bloom, and there is absolutely no putting a date to the time when love must needs cease to have any power over the human heart.

To the woman whose character is her chiefest charm, and who possesses that strange, mysterious gift we call fascination, there is really no putting any limit to the time when her chances of marriage are at an end. Men find her as delightful a companion, as ready in her sympathy, as charming in her talk as when she was a girl; in fact, she is often far more so, because the experiences of life have mellowed her judgment, and made her more interested in others than in herself.

Such a woman may be loved and wooed long after the woman whose only attraction was her pretty face has been neglected. How wise, then, for girls to cultivate the graces of mind and manner that really charm, no matter what nature has bestowed upon them in the way of outside attraction.

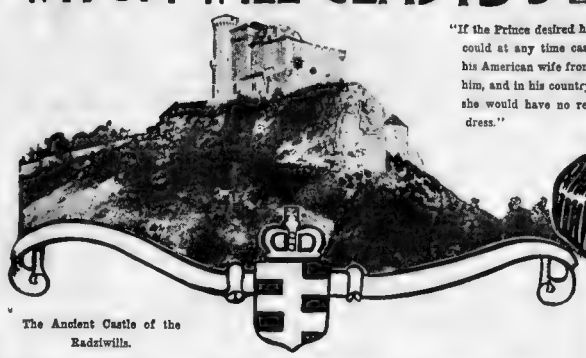
WHOM WILL GLADYS DEACON MARRY?



The Ancient Castle of the Radziwills.

Dorothy Deacon, Who Is Now the Princess Radziwill.

Sister Dorothy Weds a Prince, Sister Edith Will Be a Boston Millionaire's Bride—What Will Be the Fate of the Third Beautiful Sister Who Has Hurt Even Royal Hearts All Over Europe?

Of those Deacon sisters! Miss Dorothy Deacon is married at last, but not her sister Gladys.

Gladys Deacon, the most famous American beauty in Europe, the beauty with the most mysterious and remarkable history, whose adventures would fill a dozen novels far more thrilling than those that are created by the imagination!

What will be Miss Gladys's fate?

After the marriage of Dorothy Evelyn Deacon to the Prince Albert Radziwill and the engagement of Edith Florence Deacon to George Lee Peabody, of Boston, society at home and abroad is wondering what the future holds for the oldest daughter of the late Edward Parker Deacon, of Boston.

No modern girl has had a more checkered career than this beautiful girl who has had suitors in every country.

Was the foundation of this career laid in 1892 when the father, Edward Parker Deacon, a scion of one of Boston's proudest families, shot and killed Emile Abeille, a noted Parisian club man whom Deacon surprised in Mrs. Deacon's boudoir? Deacon was several years older than his wife, Florence Baldwin, the only daughter of Charles H. Baldwin, an officer in the United States Navy, and the richest man in the service. She was but seventeen at the time of the marriage.

The Deacon scandal and tragedy will long be remembered in Europe and American society. Incidents in the tragedy followed one another quickly. The murder was the result of a series of jealous quarrels between the young couple. Deacon feared Abeille, who was one of the most fascinating of Frenchmen. He had a great fortune inherited from his father, who had been one of the builders of the Suez Canal. He was a familiar figure in the gayest world of Paris and more than one society beauty welcomed him.

Deacon, a descendant of Puritans, could not understand certain aspects of Parisian life. When he killed the Frenchman, who, by the way, took refuge under a sofa when Deacon appeared, he felt that he was defending his home and honor.

He was arrested and sentenced to a year's imprisonment. President Carnot pardoned him before the year passed.

In the meantime, the Deacon girls were placed in the Convent of Our Lady of the Assumption, in Paris. Deacon sued for divorce, which was granted, and to him on November 4, 1892. He was given the custody of the three oldest children, Dorothy Evelyn, the youngest, was left with the mother.

From the granting of the divorce, Gladys Deacon's spectacular career began. She was twelve years old, even then a beauty. When Mrs. Deacon, the herself only thirty-one, heard the decree against her, she left the courtroom secretly, ordered her carriage to drive to the convent, and before the nuns heard of the adverse verdict, asked and received permission from the Mother Superior to take Gladys for a drive.

It was a clear case of kidnapping, and made a furore in Paris.

Mr. Deacon reached the convent shortly after his wife's departure, and immediately laid the matter before the police.

For months Mrs. Deacon held her oldest girl as hostage. Finally a compromise was effected. Mr. Deacon came back to Boston with the three older children, leaving Dorothy with Mrs. Deacon. Audrey and Edith were placed in a boarding school in New York. At the close of a year Gladys returned to her mother. She had a right to choose her guardian when she reached the age of fourteen, and she chose her mother.

From that time she passed from Boston and New York history and became European.

Dorothy Evelyn, the present Princess Radziwill, and Gladys were educated entirely in Paris along French lines.

Eight years ago a new and sensational beauty appeared in London. This beauty was Gladys Deacon. She made conquests innumerable wherever she went.

Before her first London season closed, marriage with the highest in the land seemed more than possible. To-day this beauty has to live in Paris, cut off from the friends she made in her debutante days, and particularly from the woman who was her nearest and dearest friend, Consuelo, the young Duchess of Marlborough.

It has been stated that Miss Gladys Deacon has "retired from English society to follow her own mode of life in Paris. Her devoted admirer is said to be the husband of an American wearer of the strawberry leaves, who no longer lives with her ducal husband."

At the height of her career Miss Deacon captivated the Crown Prince of Germany, who gave her a ring and wished to give up the imperial throne in order to marry her. The Prince, long since married and father of two children, holds her memory dear. He wears her picture in a locket, which has caused his royal wife many an unhappy hour.

An Indian Prince of high degree in his native land showered upon her wonderful jewels—which she returned. He begged her to share his petty throne. She declined.

The Duke of Norfolk premier duke and peer of England, one of its greatest landowners, fell in love with the beauty with the tragic background. English girls by the dozen of highest birth had been thrown at the Duke's head, but he would have none of them. He was a widower with one son, an imbecile. This son died just at the time that Miss Deacon made her conquest of England.

King Edward took an interest in the affair and did many things to bring it to a successful close. He commanded the appearance of the American girl as a guest on the royal yacht at Cowes, and also the presence of the Duke. Whenever possible he brought the two together, but the capricious beauty, after being guest of honor at Arundel Castle, refused the strawberry leaves, the Duke and the famous ancestral halls of the Norfolks.

And all England wondered what she did want!

Consuelo, Duchess of Marlborough, was Miss Deacon's staunchest supporter and closest friend during the English invasion. Miss Deacon was an honored guest month after month at Blenheim. She appeared in public always with two perfect Blenheim spaniels, the gift of the Duke. When various English women of high position tried to snub the American girl, mainly because of her beauty, the slender young duchess went directly to King Edward, and suddenly royal favors were showered on the girl wondered still more when in the course of a few weeks, Miss Deacon calmly jilted the young nobleman, and calmly announced that hence forward she would live in Paris, where, she said, "I can live my own life, have my own friends and not be criticised by every English woman who owns a husband, a house and a pair of eyes."

Gladys has been beloved by so many that she found it difficult to pick one. But something must happen. A life full of romance can hardly end in solitude. She is now thirty, and more beautiful than ever. What will happen?

Surely we shall hear some new chapter in her astonishing sentimental history.

In contrast with the sensational episodes of Gladys Deacon's life during the last five years, the careers of her sisters seem very tame indeed. Audrey, the second girl, almost as great a beauty as Gladys, died suddenly six years ago under very tragic circumstances.

Edith Florence, her mother's namesake, was educated in New York and Boston. Like her two older sisters, she refused to go to her mother the first moment the chance was given her. This chance came ten years ago, when Edward Deacon was placed in an insane asylum in Massachusetts, where he finally died.

Four years ago Mrs. Charles H. Baldwin, the second wife of Admiral Baldwin, adopted Edith, her step granddaughter, and formally presented her to Newport. Immediately Miss Deacon the third became a favorite, and was acknowledged the leading beauty of the year. She had suitors galore. Robert Walton Goelet, it is believed, offered her his enormous fortune, his noted mansions, and his most ardent affections. It was quite generally believed that when Jack Astor secured his divorce he would marry her, but after conquests enough to turn an average girl's head Edith Florence, a tall, slender brunette, a girl with the dreamy gray-blue eyes of Ireland, will marry a young Bostonian, George Lee Peabody, one of the Peabodys of New England, and a schoolboy lover.

Dorothy Deacon's recent marriage was, a strange episode in keeping with the family conditions. Prince Albert Radziwill is a youth of twenty-seven, a member of the great and numerous Radziwill family of Russia. He is heir to a principality in Lithuania, larger than the State of New York. From this principality, by the way, come thousands of immigrants to work in the coal mines of Pennsylvania.

The nominal head of the family, the prince's father, is still living. He is demented, and under these conditions the Princess mother reigns supreme. She was a proud Prussian Princess before she married Prince Radziwill, and she has bitterly opposed her son's marriage to Dorothy Deacon. When the youthful Prince announced his engagement to the American girl, the Princess went to Rome to ask the intervention of the Pope. She called on all the members of the Radziwill family to support her in her disapproval and did everything an angry Princess could do to thwart her son's hopes. She did succeed in delaying the marriage three weeks, but it eventually took place, and the only members of the bridegroom's family to be present was his sister Florence, formerly the Princess Strozzi, of Florence, but now Madame de Rapper. She and her husband made a hurried journey to London for the wedding.

Prince Albert has married without the consent of parents or church and if the Prince desired he could at any time cast his American wife from him, and in his country she would have no redress. And Miss Deacon was fully cognizant of this when she stood up promised to love, honor and obey her prince.

Two men of the Radziwill family have quite frequently married out of their class and country. A Polish Radziwill groom married a pretty Cuban girl many years ago. As the Princess Isabel will, she now lives in Cuba and holds a miniature court there. Another uncle married a Mexican girl whom he met in Washington. Prince Albert has thus had precedent to go by.

Rational Etiquette of the Sick Room.

It is only in extreme cases and at inopportune times that visitors are excluded from the sick room—the tedium of confinement is relieved so much by the smiling countenance and cheery word of a friend.

It may seem almost superfluous to offer any suggestions as to the means of making a call upon the sick acceptable, yet "oftentimes we do offend where most we wish to please." How many, even among those who are the promptest to discharge their duty in such cases, are so welcome that their return is awaited with eagerness?

The failure, or partial failure, of such well-meaning persons may arise from the fact that the sense of duty which has prompted the visit is allowed to make itself too apparent. Calling upon the sick is by no means the pleasantest of tasks, and it is not to be wondered at, perhaps, if the duty is sometimes put off until delay is no longer excusable.

If so much hesitancy is felt, a delicate dish, or a few choice flowers, accompanied by a note kindly worded and delivered in person, will relieve the embarrassment and show the good wishes of the caller.

It is hardly necessary to say that in the sick room itself sympathy ought not to be carried to the point of evident anxiety. Courage and hope for a better day are what the sick one most requires, and the face of the visitor is sure to be scanned for a trace of disappointment or alarm. It is easy to inspire confidence by the look and the grasp of the hand, and no medicine is better.

There is an easy manner, also, which is admirable in itself, and which relieves the constraint that the sick one may naturally feel in not being able properly to care for guests.

The outer wraps have, of course, been removed before entering the room, and it is not imperative to wait for an invitation to be seated. Above all, be seated comfortably. For a visitor to be, or to seem, uncomfortable, is to ensure the discomfort of the others in the room.

It is never admissible to sit on the edge of the bed, or to touch the bed in any way. The nervous organism is made over-sensitive by disease, and every liberty is resented.

Let the visitor draw as near the bed as possible without being in contact with it, for when a few feet are to be seen easily, listen attentively to every request, sympathize with every complaint, speak with a bit of gayety, or tell a little story. Then, when ten minutes have gone, let her pass softly out with a cheery good-by, and a gentle caress, and there will every probability that the visit will prove a blessing and its repetition be eagerly awaited.

WHY YOUR SON SHOULD BE A

By MAJOR-GENERAL FREDERICK D GRANT

of the General Committee, Department Middle West, A. B. S.

The movement has for its object the improvement of the American boy, physically, mentally and morally

The child is father of the man. The American Boy Scout will be healthy, reliant, brave and courteous. He will be an honor to his people and the pride of his country

He will be taught all those things which make a self-reliant man. He will be the kind of citizen who not only loves his country, but is able to help it.

This, I think, is the kind of boy we need.

BECAUSE the principles to be instilled into the minds of the boys are for their own betterment and that of the country in general. Out of the Scout movement the boys will come with healthy bodies and keener minds.

They are taught loyalty to the country's flag, obedience to parents, fealty to their employers and recognition of their lawful superiors. The Scout will be a better boy and a better man.

It is not alone that he learns things which will be useful to him and his country in time of war; the principles of actual, working and practical knowledge he will attain will be of the greatest use to him and to his country in time of peace.

BECAUSE any measure which tends to benefit the boys, the youth and young men of our country is a national benefaction. The very salvation of the mightiest of republics depends upon the character, integrity and patriotism of its citizens.

The stronger these three qualifications can be brought out in the American boy, the stronger is his country.

The more time the boy can spend in the country, drawing in its health and learning its lessons, the stronger man and better citizen he should be.

A Boy Scout Hospital Corps in Action.

What the Boy Scout Movement Means.

AMERICAN boyhood is to be organized. From coast to coast, and border-line to border-line, the American boy is being taken in hand, to be moulded into a model citizen, patriot and man.

The movement is known as the American Boy Scout It has been incorporated in New York, the parent body being given power to charter subsidiary organizations all over the country. Its purpose is to inculcate in the American boy a spirit of loyalty and obedience to the Government, to his parents and to his superiors and, by training him mentally, morally and physically, to equip him to perform the duties and obligations of citizenship in the most desirable manner.

Two months ago, the American Boy Scout was a name only. To-day, 75,000 young Americans have taken the oath and subscribed to the scout law and are ready to don their uniforms. Within a year fully half a million boys will be enrolled, and the time will soon arrive when every American boy will affiliate himself with the scout movement, the same as he now attends public school

The boys are organized in patrols of ten; ten patrols make a troop, and ten troops compose a regiment. Leaders of patrols and troops are chosen from the boys themselves, and competent drill-masters, who are either army or militia men, give the necessary instruction in scouting, athletics and military manoeuvres.

Scouts will do their main work after school hours, or when they return from business, although, strictly speaking, the scout will be scouting every minute of the day.

One of the most promising features of the movement is the fact that there is nothing dry or uninteresting about it. If it were conducted along strict military lines with nothing but long drills and arduous calisthenics, it would doubtless prove too irksome to recommend it to the average American boy. But that is not the case. The boys will be taught a thousand and one useful things; they will be drilled, they will be built up physically, and they will be disciplined, but all these things will be done in such a manner that the boys won't see anything disagreeable in them.

The American boy is a fun-loving individual, and that characteristic will be utilized to develop him. He will be initiated into all the mysteries of woodcraft, and the problems of campaigning. Respect for his elders and chivalry to the fair sex will be strongly impressed upon him. He will learn how to save the lives of others and to improve himself. He will become strong, healthy and active. He will love and honor his country, and in time of need will be able to defend it.

These things will appeal to every boy with red blood in his veins, and the boy without red blood will never shine as a scout. The scout's oath and the scout law, which are set forth on this page, indicate very clearly what is expected of the boy scout.

If a scout says: "On my honor, it is so," that means that it is so, just as if he had taken a most solemn oath. Similarly, if a scout officer says to a scout: "I trust you on your honor to do this," the scout is bound to carry out the order to the very best of his ability, and to let nothing interfere with his doing it.

The scout wears a distinctive badge on his left arm when he is in the official uniform, and when he is in ordinary clothes he wears a button bearing the insignia of the organization. None but a scout is permitted by law to wear this badge, and when a scout disobeys the scout law, this badge is forfeited. Figuratively speaking, he loses his life.

The scout is expected to stick to his parents, to his superiors, to his employers and to his country through thick and thin, against any one who is their enemy, or even talks badly about them. He must be prepared at any time to save human life and to help others. If a scout meet another scout, whether he knows him or not, he must speak to him. A scout must never be a snob. The rich scout and the poor scout stand upon the same footing and must treat each other accordingly.

A scout must always be polite, particularly to women and children, old people and invalids. Kindness to animals and obedience to his superiors are insisted upon, and a scout must smile under all circumstances, whether his task is hard and disagreeable or not. The scout should be thrifty, too; and every penny that can be saved should be put in the bank.

Such are the laws. The boys' training is varied and covers a wide range. Such subjects as woodcraft and campaigning, which will be popular with every real boy, are taken up thoroughly.

The boys will be sent to the woods and forests to learn the secrets of nature. Animals' foot-tracks will be followed up and studied, and the different kinds of animals will be observed in their natural state.

The scout will not be permitted to kill animals unless in want of food or the animal is of a harmful variety. As a matter of fact, the boy who continually watches animals in their natural state gets to love them too much to slaughter them wantonly. The scout will learn, too, which are the best wild fruits, roots and plants for his own food, so that he will be able to sustain himself in case of emergency.

Observation will be developed, and the tracks of men, horses, bicycles, etc., will be examined, and conclusions drawn as to what has been going on. Every boy will know how to saddle and harness horses, and his familiarity with the subject will enable him to tell at a glance when a horse is suffering pain from an ill-fitting strap or bit. The boy scout will consider himself disgraced if when he is with other people, they see anything big or little, near or far, high or low, that he has not already seen for himself.

There is nothing which every boy admires more than life in the open, and camp-life will be made a strong feature of the scouts' work. During the Summer time camps will be established all over the country, where the scouts may spend their vacations. They will be taught how to put up a tent, to lay and light a fire, to kill, cut up, clean and cook their food, to construct bridges and rafts, to find their way by night, and, in fact, everything which the veteran campaigner has learned by bitter experience.

Every scout will be able to swim, to ride a wheel, to ride horseback, to drive, to row, to understand various signalling systems, to interpret weather indications, to administer first aid to the injured, and to save human life. Wireless telegraphy will be mastered and aerial navigation will be taken up so that the boys will be accomplished aviators by the time aviation becomes general.

All these things will not be accomplished at once, but provision is being made to develop the boys along every possible line, not only for their own good, but for the good of the country.

Out West, in San Francisco and Los Angeles and surrounding cities and towns, the boys have taken up scouting most enthusiastically. Camps have already been established and thousands of boys have acquired the first principles of scouting.

The officers of the organization are William Randolph Hearst, president; Jefferson M. Levy, first vice-president; Charles P. DeVare, second vice-president; General James R. O'Beirne, treasurer, and James F. MacGrath, secretary. Funds will be raised by voluntary subscription. Those who contribute $10 will be entitled to enroll under the Order of the Founders of the American Boy Scout as annual members. Those who give $100 will become life-members; $250 makes one a donor; $500 gives the title of Patron, and those who give $1,000 are called Founders.

For the purposes of administration, the country is divided into five departments, known respectively as the Department of the Atlantic, the Department of New England, Department of the Southwest, Department of the Middle West, and Department of the Northwest.

Almost every prominent man in the army, the militia, the navy, the pulpit, the school board, and in public affairs generally, has expressed himself enthusiastically in the movement, and the consensus of opinion seems to be that the future welfare of the country will be coincident with the success of the American Boy Scout.

The Boy Scout Salute is given with three fingers--each finger standing for one article of the three-fold oath. Uncle Sam is proud to salute his latest recruit to the cause of American patriotism, loyalty and integrity.

How to Become a Boy Scout.

ANY boy who desires to affiliate himself with the scout movement, will find it a very simple matter. He may either organize a patrol himself by getting ten boys in his neighborhood to join him, or he may join a patrol or troop already organized by some one else in his neighborhood. If he belongs to an organization which uses the American Boy Scout scheme as part of its instruction, it will, of course, be unnecessary for him either to form or join a separate patrol.

To become scouts or patrol leaders, boys must be between ten and eighteen years old. Superior officers must be eighteen or over. The consent of the boys' parents must always be obtained.

The unit of the system is a patrol of ten boys, ten patrols forming a troop and ten troops a regiment. When a patrol or troop is organized, the leader should register it with the secretary of the organization.

As soon as a patrol is formed, a scout master will be instructed to train the boys, and he will, if possible, get the use of a room as a club room for the troop. He will order parades on convenient days weekly, and go through the course of training with the patrol, as given in the Military and Scouts Manuals obtainable from headquarters. This course of training will take about six weeks or two months, and the Manual shows everything that need be done.

After completing the course of instruction, the boy will be examined as laid down in the Manual, and if he passes the necessary tests, the Scout Master will apply to the committee, who will award him the rank and badge of second-class or first-class scout, according to the tests which he passes. Before a boy becomes a full-fledged scout of either class, he is known as a tenderfoot.

The uniform has been designated by headquarters and arrangements have been made with manufacturers so that the cost for the entire equipment will not exceed three dollars. This sum the boys are expected to pay, and they are encouraged to save their money for the purpose.

Camps are arranged for in the Summer in certain districts to which American Boy Scouts can go for as many days as they agree to arrange. Each boy will have to pay his daily expense of feeding in camp, and should therefore, begin to save money for it as soon as he joins a patrol. Where there is no camp in the neighborhood, a patrol or troop can make their own camp, either with huts or tents, or get the use of a barn or hay loft, and carry out the course of campaigning and camp life suggested in the Manual.

Each patrol must manage its own funds. There are numerous ways in which money can be raised without begging, which is prohibited. Sufficient funds can readily be obtained by work or performances which deserve money in return.

A clubroom is highly desirable. Unless one of the members of a troop is in a position to furnish such a room for the use of his comrades, arrangements should be made to hire or borrow one. Where the boys borrow a room in this manner, they are expected to be specially careful to do no harm.

The fact of being an American Boy Scout gives no license to trespass. When leave is obtained to scout over private property, particular care should be taken to avoid damaging fences or crops, to close all gates, and not to frighten animals or game.

No troop or patrol will be allowed to form unless steps are taken first to form a representative and responsible committee for the management of the proposed troop and any others which may be formed in the immediate neighborhood.

The headquarters of the American Boy Scout is at No. 239 Broadway, New York City, where the Department of the Atlantic is also located.

The headquarters of the Department of the Middle West is at Chicago, Ill., that of the Department of New England at Boston, that of the Department of the Northwest at San Francisco and that of the Department of the Southwest at Los Angeles, Cal.

They are the visible elements of a hereafter Scarcely anything is more needed on the part of boys than strength of character, true moral decision and firmness of purpose, with truth as a guide at all times

This purpose must and will be laid deep, I infer, in the very rudiments of the American Boy Scout movement

A scout is loyal.
A scout's duty is to be useful and to help others.
A scout is a friend of all, and a brother to every other scout, no matter to what social class the other belongs.
A scout is the protector of girls and women at all times—and he holds this a sacred duty.
A scout is courteous.
A scout is a friend to animals.
A scout obeys orders.
A scout smiles under all circumstances.
A scout is thrifty

What It Has Done in England.

WHAT the boy scout idea can do for a nation has been fully demonstrated in England, where Lieutenant-General Sir R S S Baden-Powell, C. B., of Boer War fame, started the movement several years ago. There are now fully 500,000 British boy scouts, and new recruits are added every day These boys have all been developed along lines never before attempted, and the result has been most gratifying to the supporters of the movement.

Some idea of what has been accomplished was given recently by Colonel W. B Wakefield, of the English army, who is one of the leaders of the boy scouts in England.

"The power of observation," he said "has been developed in the boys to an astonishing degree, and they are all accurate judges of height and distance. The training has tended to make them first-class soldiers and useful citizens, and their exercises and innocent amusements have kept them from idleness and mischief.

"Cigarette smoking and the drinking of intoxicants is, of course, prohibited, and one never sees a boy scout begging. The boys must have six shillings in the bank before they enlist. The uniforms are furnished by the organization backing the movement. In London and other large English cities the boys have proved a great help to the police in various ways and to the fire department in aiding to keep the fire lines.

"While the boy scout movement in England is by no means a military idea, the organization is so well developed that it forms a reserve force of the first importance, a reserve from which not only men but officers could be drawn in time of war

"The plan has done more to eliminate snobbishness and priggishness than anything else. The rich, the middle class and the poor meet on an equal footing, and their contact has developed a sentiment of democracy not to be found in any other large organization in Europe. The movement is non-sectarian in the broadest sense, and every creed, race and color is equally welcomed.

"There are a score of things about the movement which naturally appeal to the English boy, and it succeeded from the very start. The military tinge about it is perhaps the most seductive, but the boys' love of athletics, the honor-system, secret signs and codes, leadership, patriotism, courage and bravery, open-air life and wholesome living all combined to make it most popular with John Bull, Jr."

The English boy scouts are from twelve to eighteen years old and are recruited from every town and village in the British Empire, including Canada, Australia and South Africa

The success of the English movement may perhaps be attributed in a large measure to the esteem in which the English boys hold its founder, Sir Baden-Powell, whose courageous defense of Mafeking in the Boer war made him a British idol.

In fact, while Sir Baden-Powell originally got the scout idea from Mr Ernest Thompson Seton, the great naturalist, who had organized a few boys and taught them Indian woodcraft, it was during the Boer war that the British General had an opportunity to see what English boys could accomplish under proper leadership

When the Boers besieged Mafeking in 1899 there were only one thousand men available, including soldiers, trained men, police and townsmen, many of whom had never seen a rifle before. Mafeking was about five miles around, and every foot of it had to be defended against the enemy

As the number of men was gradually diminished by death and injuries, Lord Edward Cecil, the chief staff officer, was at his wits' end to cover the entire line of defense properly It was then that he thought of organizing the boys of the place into a cadet corps They were put in uniform and drilled and were of the greatest value to the defenders of the besieged town. Instead of tiring the fighting men with a lot of orderly work, such as carrying orders and messages and keeping lookout, it was found possible to use the young cadets, and they performed the work in the most satisfactory manner Many of the boys rode bicycles, and their wheels came into service in connection with the postal service, which the beleaguered town established for internal communication. Special postage stamps were designed for the purpose, a picture of a cadet bicycle orderly being used to decorate them.

After the war, Sir Baden Powell returned to England and undertook to train English boys for similar service in time of peace. The General has a keen insight into boy nature, and knows just how to get the best out of the youngsters.

He prepared a manual for the boy scouts which is as different to what one might expect as can be imagined Instead of containing a lot of drill instructions and dry military tactics, it tells the boys how to do everything that any fun-loving boy would himself select as the most enjoyable way to pass the time.

It may require some effort to accomplish many of the things covered in the manual, but it is the kind of effort that boys delight to take. There are a thousand and one new games which the author collected from various sources which rival cricket, football and other popular games for fascination and invigorating sport. There is not a word in the book that would appeal to the molly-coddle, but on the other hand, there is nothing in it to encourage the boy's natural love of mischief

The science of woodcraft is explained in detail and the proper way to take up camp life and campaigning is thoroughly brought out. Athletic exercises and the laws of hygiene are considered in an interesting way and the boys are shown how to develop strength and endurance and prevent disease.

But the principal feature of the English scout system is the rigid standard of honor which it has established among the boys. The boys are taught to do what is honorable for the sake of it and not for fear of the punishment which would follow discovered dereliction.

So far the plan has worked out admirably, and its effect has been noticed in the public schools, where scouts have not only become better scholars, but better boys. A scout is never afraid to tell the truth, no matter what dire punishment it may bring. Bullying in the public schools has almost died out since the scout movement became so popular in England. It is part of the scout law for the strong to protect the weak, and no English scout would stand by and see a little boy ill-treated by a stronger boy whether they belonged to the organization or not.

The scouts are always expected to speak to each other whether they knew each other or not. This has helped to eliminate a lot of that aloofishness which has always characterized Englishmen, who, it is well known, will travel for thousands of miles side by side without speaking a word to each other for the want of the conventional "introduction."

Some idea of the instruction the boys get may be gathered from the test which a tenderfoot must pass in order to become a second-class scout. He must be able to tie four of the following knots in less than thirty seconds each knot: Bowline, fisherman's bend, reef knot, clove hitch and sheet bend. He must track a deer's "spoor" (made with tracking irons) or a horse's track for a quarter of a mile in not more than fifteen minutes; or, in a town, he must describe satisfactorily the contents of one shop window out of four observed for one minute each. He must go at scout's pace one mile in [illegible] than thirteen minutes, know the scouts' laws [illegible] and be familiar with the composition of the Union [illegible] and the right way to fly it.

To become a first-class scout the tests are considerably harder, including a journey of fifteen miles by walking, riding, boat or bicycle, showing the proper way to save a person from fire, drowning, runaway carriage, sewer gas or ice-breaking, laying and lighting a fire, using not more than two matches, and cooking a quarter of a pound of flour and two potatoes without cooking utensils.

Neither the English nor the American boy is wanting in patriotism, but it is of very little use for boys to love their country if they are not able to help it in time of need The scout movement in England has developed a large army of boys who are not only willing but able to come to the defense of their country in time of war and to advance its interests in time of peace.

The Charm of Summer Wraps

Fashion Atones For All Its Ugly Dresses by Decreeing Beautiful Shawls and Scarfs—Says Lady Duff-Gordon.

Lady Duff-Gordon.
(By Campbell & Allen)

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, the foremost fashion designer in the world, writes each week the fashion page for this newspaper. Lady Duff Gordon is the recognized dress authority of England. This week she describes —with illustrations—the charms of new Summer wraps.

Lady Duff-Gordon's articles are always illustrated by sketches and photographs from her London and New York models and by her own sketches of gowns described in her pages.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at No. 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York City.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

TRULY, Dame Fashion is as inconsequent as feminine creatures are supposed to be—and proudly are!

For having devised for our wear the disfigurement the gown and the bifurcated, scanty and tied-in skirt, and insisted upon its universal wear, she proceeds to create for the covering of that truly hideous garment an entirely different outer wrap! And as out of evil must come a certain amount of good, and as the scanty skirt this at least may be said in its favor. Next it has practically been responsible for this season's creation and display of quite charming wraps in the way of scarfs, shawls, mantles and coats.

When these are worn right and even with the lightest of skirts, the whole resulting effect is distinctly good, more especially if the accompanying footwear be well selected and smart, while it is fortunate, too, that there is a continued favor of the kimono and various shapes whose ease of adjustment and comfort, as well as charm, having been well proved in the past by so many evening wraps, have made us quite willing in the present to thus add still another item to our afternoon toilettes.

A further factor in the success of the new Summer wrap is its transparency, for this not only means a weight so light as hardly to be noticed, but further insures every dainty detail of the dress beneath being made fascinatingly in evidence instead of being hopelessly hidden and wasted, a chance of introducing some telling color contrast being still another advantage to be put down to the credit of the new coats.

For the average woman, however, they are at their most serviceable, as well as their smartest, when their filmy transparency is of black or white mirroir, all bordered with a braiding of the finest soutache, but I would here draw attention to the fact that these long coats (whose straightness of cut must still suggest a certain shapeliness of outline) should never be worn by any one in "the teens," but be reserved strictly reserved for the women of, shall we say, any age from twenty-five to fifty-five! For the quite young girl they are not suitable, but for the smart matron and the stately dowager they are alike admirable, and I consider them one of the most valuable contributions to the well-equipped wardrobe. They can give a charming "finished" look to almost any dress of mirroir, cashmere de soie, satin charmeuse or indeed any other plain and heavily braided fabric, but I do not recommend their wear over any patterned fabric.

As to the women whose personal pin money are, both alike, rather out of the ordinary, they can revel in those other chiffon wraps which, regardless of rhyme or reason or weather, are deeply bordered with some costly sable or silver fox or ermine, a great collar, too, of the fur being deeply down-turned over the shoulders. I have quite lost my heart to these adorable cloaks, and I am sending you a picture of one which I have just made for an Englishwoman whose possession of some superb sables has inspired her to adopt the Parisiennes' daring decision to make an all-year-round display of her most prized possessions in the way of furs, as I duly disclosed to you last week.

For those less fortunate, however, there may, perhaps, be comfort in the knowledge that deep borderings of clipped ostrich feathers are to be a forthcoming and favored trimming, and that, therefore, it will be almost worth while adding a little unnecessary warmth to a chiffon or mirroir wrap in order to be among the first to display the new trimming. It is destined to figure not only on the long coats and cloaks, but also on some graceful little shoulder wraps, which lend themselves to adjustment in several different ways.

Now as regards the color contrasts in these transparent wraps, one daring scheme is to veil geranium pink Mirroir with a filmy fabric of passion-flower purple shading, and on this to trace a broidering of braid almost as fine as a silken thread. While dawn pink chiffon, but suggesting its lovely presence through a covering of cloud gray mirroir, is delightful in its resulting elusiveness of tone, pale pink or blue, or again mauve and gray, are other delicate schemes which are altogether to be commended, the outer fabric being in all cases bordered with silk, which repeats its own color exactly. Such schemes are, of course, only really suited to evening wear, where the most formidable and fashionable rivals to their frailty loveliness are wraps of rich tapestry brocades, whose deftly blended colorings are interwoven with shimmering threads of silver and gold, and studded, too, with jewels.

There is equal diversity in the shape of the wraps, many of them being of straight and scanty cut, wrapping over on the left side, where they fasten low down with a great jewelled clasp or a motif entwined satin cordings, and then being so long that they form a peplum effective train at the back, while others, rather more voluminous, form, when the arms are upraised, a complete square, their obvious convenience for packing purposes being shall we say, any age from twenty-five to fifty-five! For the quite young girl they are not suitable, but for the smart matron and the stately dowager they are alike admirable, and I consider them one of the most valuable contributions to the well-equipped wardrobe. They can give a charming "finished" look to almost any dress of mirroir, cashmere de soie, satin charmeuse or indeed any other plain and heavily braided fabric, but I do not recommend their wear over any patterned fabric.

As to the women whose personal pin money are, both alike, rather out of the ordinary, they can revel in those other chiffon wraps which, regardless of rhyme or reason or weather, are deeply bordered with some costly sable or silver fox or ermine, a great collar, too, of the fur being deeply down-turned over the shoulders. I have quite lost my heart to these adorable cloaks, and I am sending you a picture of one which I have just made for an Englishwoman whose possession of some superb sables has inspired her to adopt the Parisiennes' daring decision to make steamer coats, which must add warmth to their other qualifications, a finish of plain black braiding being the only addition permissible to a material ordinarily associated with masculine garments and, even though it has now been appropriated for feminine use, quite unsuited to anything but the most severely simple treatment.

Of course, the taffeta coat, in any one of a dozen different and delicate colorings, also has its place in the dress scheme of the day, the shorter shapes looking well on quite youthful wearers, and with the simplest little muslin frocks, while the larger models suit older women and more elaborate gowns. Some, too, there are who may care to invest in the long coats whose original fabric of white linen is transformed into almost lace-like lightness by much elaborate and openwork broidering, these being the distinct companions for lingerie gowns, pain muslin robes and the like.

And now let me also give you an introduction to a new hat, in which Dame Fashion pays tribute to Mother Nature and the Summer season by choosing for sole trimming a great sheaf of wheat ears, and a cluster of roses and marguerites. But having gone thus far, she introduces a little variety into nature's scheme by making the marguerites of deep velvety black, adding golden wheat ears and delicate pink roses. She does not attempt to improve upon it. Certainly the bouquet which thus displays the combined influences of art and nature is wonderfully effective as set against a background of tightly stretched Tussore, whose underlining of black straw makes this somewhat trying hat conveniently becoming to the complexion.

As to the rather simpler—and shorter—gowns of lace cord muslin which are suited for general wear on Summer days. You may take as typical of many new models one dainty little affair whose whiteness is sprigged over with countless wild flowers of leaf-green shading. The blending of white and green, being always an deliciously cool looking, was its choice is a positive boon to the community at large, as well as a pleasure to the individual wearer. Starting on the corsage and so continuing into the skirt as to outline a panel in front, and then do duty as a bordering about the knees, all bands of gauged muslin piped with green and further edged with ruffings of Valenciennes lace, folds of green silk giving the rather high waisting which is in keeping with the picturesque style of the little dress.

With linen set in groupings on the bodice are many tiny buttons covered with the muslin and each displaying the device of a diminutive green flower. The Valenciennes lace yoke is carved in a deep round at the neck, and is to the underslip, which does duty at one and the same time as lining and petticoat. It is of softest white satin, with borderings of lace and threadings of ribbon. The importance of these minor and dainty details being all the greater when the dress does duty is of such simple fabric and style.

The Negligee Cure for Women.

THIS is not the first time the relation between clothes and health has been theorized upon. But a fashionable London physician has given a new twist to the subject in his pro-ties during the Winter just past, which, in that climate, witnessed almost an epidemic of influenza. Here is his argument:

"As we all know who have either suffered ourselves, or who have invalids to nurse, the time of greatest peril to sufferers and to those about them, is the period of convalescence. It is then when nerves go to pieces, when tempers get out of hand, when time hangs heavy, when the days grow inordinately long, when everything and everybody seems to be wrong. This is a distinctly trying time for all.

"But when the patient is a woman a great deal may be done toward keeping her cheerful and bracing her nerves by judicious changes rung on what may be called negligee toilettes. At least this is my professional opinion. "Experience shows that when ammoniated quinine may fail a negligee in satin charmeuse may succeed, and when cinchona proves powerless, dainty slippers and a pretty kimono will work wonders. It is here the power of suggestion may be utilized.

"Tell a patient who is depressed that she has on a most becoming dressing-gown, or that her still undressed hair looks charming against the background of a pretty silk cushion, and she will perceptibly brighten. The knowledge that she is attractively garbed, that she is en suite, so to say, as regards gown, chaussure, and trinkets, will do more than a quart of tonic or the strongest nutrients toward bringing back a woman's natural spirits and physical strength."

Princess "Pat" Wins her Marquis.

She Wouldn't Have the Kings, Dukes and Princes Her Domineering Uncle Sent—Just Like in Fairy Tales—To Woo Her, Wouldn't Forget When She Was Banished to Africa—All She Wanted Was "Charlie"—And Now She Gets Him.

"HAVE you noticed that radiant smile on the face of Princess Pat? That long-absent, illuminating smile that won't come off?"

In the British royal family and elsewhere in the smartest English social circles that question is being answered with intelligent affirmatives.

"Yes. At last poor Patricia is rewarded for her constancy. King George V. did not succeed to his father's determination to marry her to a throne. The bars are down and she is free to choose the love of her girlhood that never waned, the Marquis of Anglesea."

In the clubs sacred to peers of the realm they are summing up the situation in character-six terseness.

"Yes. Having neatly sidestepped Alfonso, Manuel and most of the eligible royal princes and dukes, at last she gets her 'Charlie.'"

That smile must be a welcome one, wherever Princess "Pat" is seen. New photographs of her will be viewed with interest, for those so widely published during the last five or six years have shown us a most sweet and charming countenance with the eyes and mouth of "Mater Dolorosa." Naturally, we have seen and those wistful eyes, the drooping corners of that mouth, with the apparently hopeless love of the late King Edward's niece for Charles Henry Alexander Paget, Marquis of Anglesea.

But now she has come back from her hunting trip in East Africa transformed by that smile to which the knowing give but one interpretation, "They sent her to the jungles to forget but everywhere she could see only the Marquis. All the jungle folk seemed to be in sympathy. She came back more in love than ever—and cheered with the knowledge that her constancy to "Charlie" had finally worn out opposition.

As the youngest, most beautiful daughter of King Edward's brother, the Duke of Connaught, when Princess "Pat" decided to escape a throne she had her work cut out for her. Attractive royal princesses are none too numerous. When English, particularly, they are not lightly to be wanted on mere peers. They are tremendous political assets, and King Edward was not noted for missing any political advantage, least of all one that favorably affected the fortunes of members of his own family.

Ever since Princess Patricia budded into womanhood until very recently she has been the beautiful focus of royal matrimonial negotiations. The first and most advantageous of the alliances planned for her was with Alfonso, King of Spain. Edward was most stubborn y set on this affair, probably all the more so because he realized that Patricia's opposition was due to her fancy for the young Marquis of Anglesea.

The British King is pretty nearly absolute monarch in his own family, and probably out for one thing poor Patricia would have had to yield. This was the fact, learned later, that Alfonso was strongly inclined to another English princess—Victoria, of Battenberg, who in marrying the King of Spain would solve the political part of the problem equally well, while suitably filling the career of another royal eligible.

The comparatively recent effort to marry Patricia to Manuel, the young King of Portugal, was less strenuous because Portugal is one of those countries which cut a comparatively small figure on the political map of Europe. Still Manuel was a full-fledged king, and the son of a king, who was one of Edward's most particular friends. He was sent on a visiting tour of most of the European courts with the admitted object of picking out his bride.

Along with the other eligibles, poor Patricia had to meet the young King with an aspect of expectant amiability. Fortunately for her, and all the others, Manuel was strangely unsusceptible. He began and completed his Prime Minister-managed tour in apparently the same state with respect to his heart. Afterward it was reported that a pretty Portuguese noble lady had held his affections all along. Once more Princess "Pat" could breathe easily while dreaming of her "Charlie."

In 1906 the Princess had a very bad quarter-year owing to her royal uncle's desire to cement the new and friendly relations between Great Britain and Russia by marrying her to the Grand Duke Michael, only brother of the Czar. At one time there were unofficial reports of a betrothal. Undoubtedly this time the Princess was saved by a charge in the diplomatic situation.

A year and a half ago, when Princess Patricia visited Italy with her father, the Duke of Connaught, there was a revival of an old story that the Count of Turin, brother of the Duke of the Abruzzi, and in the line of succession to the Italian throne, was really the royal prince picked out for her husband. This was at about the time that the courtship between the Duke of the Abruzzi and Miss Katherine Elkins came to an unmistakable end.

All the time, however, the Princess's love for the Marquis of Anglesea was more and more in evidence. Now a chance of tactics was decided upon. Princess "Pat" should be provided with a means of forgetting her "Charlie." The Englishman who wants to forget anything—especially a love affair—always rushes off to Africa after big game. By rushing Princess "Pat" off this way it was confidently hoped to remove the Anglesea image from her brain and heart as a practical preliminary to substituting there the image of the next royal bachelor in the market.

As already mentioned, the African experiment had the opposite effect, and an effect so pronounced that, King Edward being no more, and George V. indifferent about the matter, further efforts to coerce the Princess were abandoned.

Princess "Pat's" preference for the Marquis of Anglesea from the first was quite apparent to her family. She never made any effort to conceal it. At the time attempts to coerce her into regarding King Alfonso favorably reached a crisis, she threw herself on a sofa weeping and declaring that no power could compel her to marry him. She would have Anglesea or none.

Once at a grand ball given by the Duchess of Westminster at Grosvenor House she sanctioned on the part of the young Marquis the coolest possible breach of royal etiquette. Instead of waiting to be informed by an equerry that "Her Royal Highness would be pleased to dance with you," he defied the rule by marching up to her with an air of proprietorship and claiming—and getting—six dances in succession.

For any girl, except a royal princess the Marquis of Anglesea is an admitted "catch." He is a handsome young Welsh peer of most engaging manners, and his income will be enormous in a few years when the estates recover from the debts contracted by his predecessor.

It must now be comforting to the Marquis of Anglesea that he has given the Princess so little cause for jealousy. With kings, princes and grand dukes as his rivals he must often have quite despaired. Yet it appears that the only bright eyes that ever may have caused him to waver were those of Miss Billy Burke, the charming American actress. It is said that this episode at one time caused Princess "Pat" the keenest uneasiness.

This affair occasioned much gossip at about the time when the young Marquis came into his title and his somewhat involved estates. Princess "Pat's" preference for him being well known, and he seeming a sedate, serious and well-behaved young man, his sudden penchant for the society of celebrated stage people at Anglesea Castle caused surprised comment.

Presently it was gossiped that Miss Billy Burke was the chief actress attraction. Suddenly London society began flocking to the Prince of Wales' Theatre, where Billy Burke was playing in "The Naval Girl," never to see what manner of charm was here that it should woo a Marquis away from a royal princess.

From that moment Billy Burke's admirers increased alarmingly in numbers. Her charm was undeniable. Besides, nearly every night, the Marquis of Anglesea could be seen in a seat right down in front with his eyes riveted upon that spot on the stage where Billy Burke happened to be.

It was known that the Marquis sought and obtained an introduction to the actress, and "Poor Princess 'Pat'" for a time was on all the knowing tongues.

Now we know that this was merely a passing fancy, engendered, probably, by the apparent hopelessness of the Marquis's cause with the Princess.

It makes the romance of constancy in spite of the most difficult obstacles a woman's love ever encounters all the more interesting to know that Princess Pat" is probably the most beautiful and charming of all living royal princesses, and quite as much so as any living actress. Princess "Pat" has endeared herself to all who have known her with any degree of intimacy.

The "Connaught Clique," as her immediate social set is called, has included several American girls, among them Miss Jean Reid, daughter of the Ambassador; Mildred Carter, daughter of Ridgeley Carter, Secretary of the Embassy, and Miss Marguerite Drexel, who recently married.

Not long ago when Patricia made up her mind to publish a little volume of travels, she selected two American girl friends as her partners in the enterprise—Miss Claire Frewen and Miss Nelly Post.

The author of "Open Letters," published in an English magazine, has this to say to Princess "Pat" about herself.

"You have about you a great joie de vivre, a gay spirit and a brightness and quickness of speech that is seldom to be found among royal ladies. And you dress well, in a smart style, show good taste in your choice of frocks and know the art of putting on things properly, for, after all, this last depends on oneself and not on one's "dresser," as they style a ladys' maid in royal circles as well as at the theatre.

"And everyone may not be aware that your Royal Highness possesses a rare and rather occult quality; this is known as the odic force—a power which tells its owner when he or she is in the neighborhood of water or of metals—and the fact that one has this gift hints at the possible possession of other psychic gifts.

"And you are a pioneer of progress as regards the way in which our young princesses do the gayeties of a London season."

How the Cold Changes Growing Plants.

WEEKS of cold weather after the early warmth of Spring in regard to the effect upon the life-processes of the plant recall the results of some interesting experiments in which plants were submitted to artificial cold and to the action of certain volatile fluids. It is well known that the potato develops a sweet flavor after it has been exposed to frost, and there seems to be little doubt that this is due to the formation and accumulation of sugar by the enzyme. Under favorable conditions of temperature there is no accumulation of sugar, because the oxidation or respiratory process proceeds unhindered and sugar disappears.

Cold does not stop the enzyme working, but it arrests the respiratory process, which thus fails to destroy the sugar, and so it accumulates in the tuber and gives it the well-known sweet taste of a frost-bitten potato.

Further observations have shown that cold precipitates an interaction between such glucosides as are present in the leaves of certain plants. When, for example, the leaves of cruciferæ are strongly chilled or exposed to the vapor of chloroform they soon give evidence of mustard oil being present.

Similarly, the leaves of gaultheria produce methyl salicylate, the constituent of wintergreen oil. Then in the case of those plants which produce hydrocyanic acid, the so-called cyanogenetic plants, the leaves on chilling evolve prussic acid. For some reason not yet clear it would appear, therefore, that the chloroformation or etherization, or chilling of plant leaves sets up an interaction between glucosides and ferments are present, resulting in a premature formation of products which would be steadily and continuously evolved under normal conditions of temperature.

My Secrets of Beauty

No. 82—The Beauty Retreat, by Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the Most Famous Living Beauty.

"I took this opportunity, too, to have my eye-lashes clipped."

Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

MADAME CAVALIERI to-day writes most significantly on the value to beauty of occasionally retreating from the rest of her species and seeking the rest and recuperation of retirement from her customary associations—"The Beauty Retreat," she calls it, and shows how it brings back the light to dull eyes and freshness to body and spirit. Mme. Cavalieri's subject next week will be "Just Smiles."

White wax ..... ½ oz.

Cucumber juice ..... 2 oz.

"Also I have let my hair rest. You know, it is natural for the hair to hang straight from the heads. Hairpins are a torture, and the twisted strands of hair a travesty upon nature's methods. Nature's hair dressers are the sun and wind. I could not allow the sunshine to enter here, but the wind I have allowed at times when I was sitting, or stirring around in the room, to freely enter. My hair has been carefully brushed night and morning and my scalp massaged every night. It has been braided loosely before retiring, but not once has it felt the touch of hairpins.

"My hair being dark, I have rubbed into the scalp every morning this lotion:

Sulphate of iron, 7 grams.
Distilled water, 2 oz.
Red wine, 1 pint.

"Were I a blonde and wished to brighten my fair hair, I should use instead:

Honey, 2 ozs.
Rhubarb stalks, steeped in white wine, 3 ozs.

"And rub this well into both scalp and hair, wiping the hair dry and letting it hang.

"My feet are resting, too. You notice that I am wearing sandals and no stockings. Every day they are bathed in strong borax water, then massaged with witch hazel and doused into cold water to harden them, then well dried, especially between the toes, so that no soft corns can form.

"Ah! my dear. I shall be made over by my beauty retreat. You shall see."

And so she was.

A Huntsville, Texas, girl writes to ask for a face lotion at once soothing and whitening.

Peanol, or nearly equal, quantities of almond oil and tincture of benzoin would fit your need.

A local "Constant Reader" writes: "I got rid of a double chin by rubbing ice across it as you advised. Will you please let me know what to do to make the neck plump and firm, also whether to use the preparation of coffee and salt you advised through the hair or on the scalp?"

Bending your head backward and rocking about, turn[illegible] on the shoulders will develop the muscles of your neck and make them firm.

Massaging the neck with almond oil or cocoanut oil at night or before retiring should in time plump it.

I use the coffee and salt in both ways.

A young woman writes that she is a pronounced blonde and, being so, doesn't want to use anything that will make her hair seem "a disappointed blonde," by which I suppose she means a few shades darker. She asks for a hair tonic that will cleanse the scalp and tone the roots of the hair. She complains that her hair is brittle. I think this formula is well worth trying. I know that several blond friends of mine have used it without taking on any disappointed shade.

Quinine sulphate ..... 15 grains.
Tincture of cantharides ..... 1½ drams.
Tincture of rhatany ..... 1½ drams.
Glycerine ..... 1 oz.
Spirit of lavender ..... 1 oz.
Alcohol ..... 2 ozs.

The same young woman says she is afflicted with pimples on the back. For this use several handfuls of starch in your daily bath. If this outward application does not remove them you had better see a physician, and be treated for the impure condition of the blood that evidently exists.

A further request from the same source is for a cold cream that will not fatten the face, since, she says, her face is fat enough. Most cold creams pimple the face. That is their anti-wrinkle value. Use the cold cream more sparingly if you fear fattening, but nourish the skin sufficiently, so that it will not develop wrinkles. This preparation is a cooling and whitening lotion with no fattening properties.

Rosewater ..... 1 oz.
Benzole ..... 1 teaspoonful.

For enlarged pores, scrub the nose with a complexion brush dipped into liquid green soap, then anoint it with a pure cold cream.

An anxious mother writes: "My little girl, aged six years, has very fine blond hair, curly and of a lovely silvery shade, but lately it has commenced to grow dark in spots. Will you kindly inform me at your earliest convenience what to do to retain its original silvery shade?"

A young woman who has hair of that shade informs me that her mother used borax plentifully in the water in which she washed it. Also she sprinkled into a bowl of water twenty or more drops of lemon juice.

Bicarbonate of soda used in the proportion of an ounce to a quart of warm water keeps the hair light, but makes it brittle.

From a grateful reader comes this note:

"Dear Madame Cavalieri—I am one of your constant readers, and I have written you before, and you answered me through the newspaper. I asked you what to do to make my eyelashes grow, and it did me a great deal of good. I don't know how to thank you enough. Will you kindly tell me if it is well to wash the face in borax-softened water? If not, will you tell me what will soften the water?

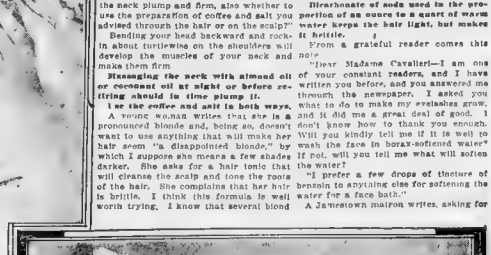
"I prefer a few drops of tincture of benzoin to anything else for softening the water for a face bath."

A Jamestown matron writes, asking for a recipe for a massage cream that will not grow hair on the face.

This celebrated Hungary water, used by the beautiful Queen Elizabeth of that country would meet your needs.

Queen Elizabeth's Hungary water:

Oil of rosemary	½ oz.
Oil of lavender	2 drops
Oil of petit-grain	30 drops
Tincture of tolu	4 drams
Orange flower water	½ pint
Rectified spirits of wine	1½ pints



"Several times a day I massage my eyebrows very gently with my fingers dipped in lanoline."

"I lay on the couch, placed a bandalette, moistened in witch hazel and rose water on my eyes, and slept."

"I used my eye cup a dozen times a day, and always on rising and retiring."

The Girl Who Has Many Men Friends—But No Husband.

Our grandmammas most certainly were never permitted to indulge in friendships with any masculine creature—even had they wished to do so. The young men of those days were either beaux or nothing, and although—to the mingled horror and envy of her feminine companions—a belle sometimes indulged in the luxury of two strings to her bow—or, rather, two beaux to her string—yet would fair brows have arched themselves indeed had either proposed to be merely her friend!

And the last generation really progressed very little.

Let him show the smallest inclination for the society of the mammas of to-day, and the grandpapas were prone to want to know "what are your intentions, young man?" and on learning there were none, short shrift did a youth receive!

But the girl of to-day has indeed changed all that. She has men friends galore, and it is difficult to say whether she or they profit most by the friendship.

Sometimes, of course, they become her lovers, and then someone has to suffer; yet it would be as wise to live in a cellar for fear of sunstroke as to avoid friendship between the sexes simply lest it end in unrequited love.

She is assuredly unselfish, for man is an egotistical animal, and finds nothing for very long as interesting as himself. The girl who wants to talk about her own interests and hopes will not be popular!

The girl with many men friends has the gift of sympathy. She may know but little of the world and its hardships and temptations, yet the precious gift of sympathy will dower her with the power to understand and console.

And her manner is delightful—this maid with many men friends.

She isn't pleasant and charming because it would be to be the reverse—but simply because she is pleasant and charming, and to be anything else would be quite foreign to her nature.

That she is a saint! To be that would mean a lack of character that certainly would win her nothing.

Curiously enough, in one way—although it is easily understood in another—the girl with many men friends rarely marries young.

Her friendships satisfy her, and, indeed, her life is invariably so full and happy that it is small wonder that the little archer finds her a somewhat difficult mark.

But when love does come she is just as much under his thrall as any pretty schoolgirl who has scarcely spoken to a man.

And although they will regard her fiance with mingled wrath and envy and loudly proclaim his absolute unworthiness, not one of the friends of the girl with many but will rejoice in the happiness that has come to crown her life.

Giving the Babies of the Poor a Chance.

How an English Mission Develops the Minds of Infants by Games and Play Scientifically Selected.

THE children of the poor are being handled in a novel way in London. Little tots from three to five years old are taken in hand by philanthropic societies and are brought up on scientific principles calculated to develop the best that is in them.

Rich parents who are anxious to be relieved of the care of their children for several hours in the course of the day, have only to send them to their well-ventilated nursery, where skilled nurses watch over them and play with them, but the child of the tenements is usually left to work out its own salvation in a hot kitchen or a crowded living room. The poor youngster may be fortunate enough not to fall out of the window or into the fire, but until it is old enough to go to school it receives absolutely no attention save that which the natural love and affection of its parents may provide.

To remedy these conditions and to give the children of the poor more of a chance to start their young lives right than their poverty-stricken homes afford philanthropic societies in England have established nurseries for the poor, where little tots from three to five years old are cared for by specially fitted nurses and their senses and faculties are scientifically nurtured.

One of the most successful of these institutions is the Wragge Mission Nursery at Hoxton, London, where a four-story building is given over to the work. Only the children of the slums are eligible, and no child over five years old is received.

The Minds of the Children Are Developed on a Firm Foundation of Building Blocks.

A Lunch of Crackers and Cheese is Served on the Roof.

At this early age it is, of course, impossible to ground the children even in the rudiments of the "three R's," but much can be done to increase their powers of observation, to develop their sense of perception, and to implant a love for the beautiful. Few children are ready to receive regular school instruction before the age of five or six, but educators have long realized that the training of the child should begin at the age of two or three, if not before, and that much may be accomplished at even that early age which will be of the greatest permanent value.

At the Wragge Nursery, many of the ideas of Froebel, the inventor of the kindergarten system of instruction, are put into practice, but more recent plans of primary school and kindergarten work, which represent great advances upon the conditions of former years, are also followed.

When the weather is fine the children are taken to the roof, where they do their play-work in the open. When the elements do not permit, however, large, well ventilated playrooms provide ample accommodations for the youngsters. The rooms are tastefully decorated in a manner calculated to inspire the children, and the furniture is characterised by its simplicity.

Modern kindergarten methods frown upon teaching the child by rote. The average mother confines her efforts to develop her child mostly to teaching it little verses and songs and possibly to count up to ten or twenty, but scientific teachers declare that such instruction is harmful rather than beneficial. Children so instructed sing and repeat words without having the faintest idea of their meaning, and their brains are confused instead of developed. In the Wragge Nursery a more sensible method is employed. Simple songs are taught the children, but they are all susceptible to illustration by means of action, and the teacher in imparting the words to the youngsters illustrates their meaning by suitable gestures, which the children imitate.

A large part of the child's instruction consists of these action-songs, which are very popular with the children and hold their interest better than anything else. The youngsters are arranged in a circle, sometimes sitting, sometimes standing, the teacher taking up her position either in the centre or as part of the ring, and even the most backward of the youngsters find it a simple task to follow both words and gestures.

In the nursery rooms and on the roof, low tables ruled off in squares are provided for the children, and many of the games are played on them. Froebel blocks, of the same size as the squares marked off on the tables, are used by the children and built up and knocked down as the child's fancy dictates. Very little restraint is exercised, the theory being that the best means of developing a child is to follow nature's plan to a large extent and to let the child play rather than to make it work.

Sewing and stringing beads and similar exacting pastimes are not in favor at the Wragge Nursery, as it is considered that such exercises require too much strain and are of doubtful benefit.

Drawing and painting, however, are encouraged, the little ones being permitted to scribble and daub to their heart's content without constraint or supervision of any kind. Their efforts may not be very artistic, and the combinations of color are not always harmonious, but the pastime affords the little tots harmless amusement and serves to develop latent talents.

In the development of the child it is not lost sight of that the senses mature before the higher intellectual powers. The relation of numbers, for instance, is not abstract as plainly to fall outside the scope of the nursery-infant and though a bright youngster of three may be taught to count up to one hundred, to add two and two, and so on, the process is of doubtful benefit, and may even be harmful. At the Wragge Nursery, no attempt is made to "force" a child in this manner. Parrot-like achievements are not highly regarded amongst scientific educators of the young. But in the child's earliest days, his five senses are susceptible to scientific development and it is in that direction that the Wragge teachers devote their best efforts.

Beautiful-smelling flowers are employed to train the child's sense of smell, colored objects are used to teach he child to distinguish colors, the piano is brought into requisition to develop the first principles of sound, and the senses of touch and taste are similarly nurtured.

There are over two hundred children in regular attendance at the Wragge Mission Nursery and similar institutions provide accommodations for many thousands more. No charge is made and the children are fed at lunch time. Cheese and crackers and milk form the staple diet, and the youngsters seem to thrive on it.

Simple calisthenic exercises are employed to develop the children's power of co-ordination and to strengthen them physically, and physicians examine the children periodically and prescribe for them.

The plan not only serves to develop the children themselves, but takes a big load off the shoulders of their parents, whose daily occupations now make it impossible for them to give the time and attention to their children which their tender years demand.
